CARRIER—To Stockton, William Watson, from his house, on Wednesday.

The following name has been inadvertently omitted in the Directory of Billingham township and parish, in this division of Stockton Ward, viz., Hutchinson George, S. O. farmer, Bellasys.

STOCKTON WARD.—SOUTH-WEST DIVISION.

This division of Stockton Ward comprises the parishes of Bishopton, Egglecliffe, Elton, Long Newton, Middleton St. George, Norton, Redmarshall, and Stockton, whose united area is 30,152 acres. The population, in 1851, was 14,442 souls.

BISHOPTON PARISH.

This parish comprises the townships of Bishopton, East and West Newbiggin, and Little Stainton, and is annexed to the Sedgfield Union. It is bounded on the north by the parishes of Redmarshall and Grindon, on the north-west by Great Stainton, on the west by Aycliffe, on the south-west and south by Haughton-le-Skerne, on the south-east by Long Newton and Elton, and on the east by Redmarshall.

BISHOPTON township is principally the property of John Eden, Esq., John Page Sourby, Esq., Archdeacon Croft, the trustees of the late Thomas Hutchinson, Esq., and George Head, Esq. Henry Blackett, Esq., is lord of the manor. The area of the township is 2,002 acres, and its annual value £1,923 17s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 349; in 1811, 312; in 1821, 365; in 1831, 423; in 1841, 362; and in 1851, 365. The earliest account of Bishopton occurs in the Continuation of Simeon of Durham:—"There arose a feud betwixt Cumin and Roger de Conyers, from whom he never could extort either homage or fealty, as from the other barons. Roger, therefore, in self-defence, began to fortify his house at Bishopton for very fear of William. Cumin made an attempt with a strong force to surprise the place, but was repulsed and obliged to retreat; and here the bishop found a safe residence, and received the homage of such of his vassals as returned to their duty." Bishopton, after this transaction, remained in the possession of the family of Conyers for at least five centuries; and little of consequence occurred here till the breaking out of the northern rebellion in 1569, when "the rebels," writes Sir George Bowes, "constrained by force sundry to follow them; as the people of Bishopton, tenants of John Conyers, my son-in-law, being ready to come forward to serve the queen's majesty under him here, they not only forced them to go with them, but compelled the rest of the town, armed and unarmed, to go to Darneton." It is recorded that sixteen persons from "Byshopton," eight from "Little Staynton," and one from "Newbyggynge," joined the insurgents; and the executions which followed the failure of the enterprise were four at Bishopton, two at Little Stainton, and one at Newbiggin. Bishopton remained in the possession of the Conyers family until 1613, in which and the two following years, Sir George Conyers, Knt., of Sockburn, and George Conyers, Esq., his son and heir, alienated the whole of their manors of Bishopton, Stainton, and Newbiggin, in various parcels, to their tenants; Bishopton is at present held by the gentlemen above mentioned. The most remarkable object in the township is the Castle Hill, a fortification consisting of an artificial conical mount with a truncated summit, and surrounded by a double trench. It is constructed of the common clay and such stones as might be picked up in the surrounding country, and both its sides and summit are covered with verdure. In Hutchinson's time its height was estimated at sixty feet, but at present it is forty-three and a half feet in height, and the flat top is an ellipsis of fifty feet by thirty. The inner ditch is carried close around the base; but the outer one, though nearer it on the north and south, extends to a considerable distance east and west. The Bishopton Beck flows by on the south, and its waters were probably used for filling the trenches. The origin of this fort is traditionally ascribed to Roger de Conyers, but some writers consider it to be much more ancient, and suppose it to be a Roman, Saxon, or Danish intrenchment.

The Village of Bishopton is pleasantly situated on an eminence, about six miles west-north-west from Stockton, and consists of two open rows of good houses. The parish feast is held on St. Peter's-day.

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is situated in the centre of the village, and was rebuilt and enlarged in 1846-7, at a cost of £1,200, chiefly defrayed by the present vicar and his sisters. It now consists of a nave, north aisle, chancel, vestry at the east end of the north aisle, and a western tower, under which is the principal entrance to the church. The chancel is separated from the nave by a pointed arch, and contains a triple lancet eastern window of stained glass, the centre portion representing the Lamb bearing the banner, presented by Miss Anderson, of Bishopton. The tower contains an organ by Hoggett and Sons, of Darlington. There are 300 sittings in the church, 100 of which are free and unappropriated. The parish register commences in 1653. Roger Conyers, with the consent of Robert, his son and heir, granted Bishopton and Sockburn churches to Sherburn Hospital, soon after its foundation; and Bishop Pudsey confirmed the gift, but reserved to himself the power of ordaining proper vicars thereto. The living is at present a discharged vicarage, valued in the Liber Regis at £4 5s. 10d., and in the patronage of the master and brethren of Sherburn Hospital. The glebe consists of about seventy acres. The hospital of Sherburn is entitled to the tithe of wool and lamb. The gross annual income of the living is about £170. Rev. Thomas Burton Halgate, vicar.

Here is a small Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1834.

The School, situated near the church, was erected by subscription in 1813, and has an average attendance of about fifty pupils. There is a house for the master attached.

Charities.—Barker's Charity.—The yearly sum of £1, left by Thomas Barker (see page 369), is paid by a tenant of the Marchioness of Londonderry at East Newbiggin, and distributed at the church, amongst the poor of the parish, by the churchwardens on Candlemas-day.—Robert Thompson, by will, January 31st, 1718, charged his property in the township of Bishopton with £5, left to the poor by his uncle, William Robson, deceased. In respect of this sum, the owner of Bell's Field pays 5s. a-year, which is distributed with the preceeding charity.—Donors Unknown.—The churchwardens receive 5s. annually from the owner of some houses in Bishopton, and 13s. 4d. from the owners of certain land in Little Stainton. The latter sum is distributed with the above charities, and the 5s. in penny and twopenny loaves at the same time.

CARRIER.—Robert Old, to Stockton, on Wednesdays.

EAST AND WEST NEWBIGGIN township comprises an area of 718 acres, and its annual value is £538 5s. The population in 1801 was 42; in 1811, 34; in 1821, 26; in 1831, 35; in 1841, 37; and in 1851, 37 souls. This place was, as we have seen, the property of the Conyers family; it is now possessed by Brian Harrison, Esq.; William Henry Lambton, Esq.; the Marchioness of Londonderry; and the trustees of the late Earl of Eldon, each of whom claims the manorial rights, &c., of his own property. The township is about six miles west of Stockton.

Directory.—The farmers are John Atkinson, Whinney Hill; Robert Anngle; Brian Harrison, yeoman; Thomas Lax, Pit Field House; Christopher Teaurt; and Richard Tinkler, yeoman, Sauf Hall.

LITTLE STAINTON township is principally the property of the trustees of the late Earl of Eldon, and William Trotter, Esq. Henry Collingwood Blackett is the lord of the manor. The township contains 1,083 acres, and its annual value is £797 5s.. It contained in 1801, 59 inhabitants; in 1811, 62; in 1821, 62; in 1831, 54; in 1841, 74; and in 1851, 82. Little Stainton formerly belonged to the Conyers family, and having undergone various changes of proprietorship, is now held by the gentlemen above mentioned.

The Hamlet of Little Stainton is situated about seven miles west-by-north of Stockton, and a mile south of Stainton-le-Street.

Directory.—Joshua Hill, brick and tile manufacturer, Little Stainton Tillery; and the farmers are John Blench, Little Stainton; John Gibbon, Long Pasture House; Robert Petch; and John Thompson.

EGGLESCLIFFE PARISH.

The parish of Egglescliffe is bounded on the north by Stockton, on the north-west by Redmarshall, on the west by Middleton St. George, and on the east and west by the river Tees. It comprises the townships of Aislaby, Egglescliffe, and Newsham.

AISLABY or AISLAKBY township is the property of the trustees of the late Mrs. Colling, Lord Eldon and others, and contains 2,260 acres. Its annual value is £2,610 18s. 4d. The population in 1801 was 116; in 1811, 148; in 1821, 166; in 1831, 143; in 1841, 128; and in 1851, 141 souls. This township was formerly possessed by a family bearing the local name, which we find first mentioned in 1313, when William de Aislakby and Agnes his wife presented the chantry of St. Thomas the Martyr, founded within the manor, to Thomas de Manneley, chaplain. In 1410, the estate became, by marriage with the heiress of Aislakby, the property of Hugh de Asteley; and it was sold, July 10th, 1557, by William Asteley, to Robert Hindmers, clerk. The family of the latter failing in issue male, Aislaby was purchased of them, in 1595, by Michael Pemberton, Esq., and remained in his family till about the year 1720, when it was alienated to Robert Raikes, Esq., of Northallerton; and Robert Raikes Fulthorpe, Esq., sold the reputed manor of Aislaby to Rowland Webster, Esq., of Stockton, from whose descendants it was purchased by the first Earl of Eldon, and is now held by his representatives.

The Village of Aislaby is situated one mile west-north-west of Yarm, and five south-west-by-south of Stockton.

Fishgarth is a piece of meadow ground on the banks of the Tees, supposed to take its name from a dam or weir for taking salmon, which formerly existed here, and some remains of which are still visible. Trafford Hill or Trefford Hill, occupies a commanding situation on the southern verge of the township. Thomas Graa held this manor in 1336, by the service of a pair of white gloves on St. Mary Magdalen's day; and in the next century it was held by the Tempests, from whom it was transferred by marriage to the family of Mallory. It was afterwards held by the Wentworths; and we find John Witham, Esq., of Cliffe, recorded as the owner of the estate in 1640. In 1832, it belonged to Robert Campion, Esq., of Whitley, by whom it was sold in 1840.

EGGLESCLIFFE township contains 1,507 acres, and the property assessed to the county-rate in 1853 was valued at £3,850. Its population in 1801 was 270; in 1811, 293; in 1821, 332; in 1831, 424; in 1841, 443; and in 1851, 493 souls. The principal landowners are F. S. Standish, Esq. (who is also lord of the manor), Thomas Meynell, Esq., Thomas W. Waldy, Esq., Rev. W. S. Temple, and others. The Stockton and Darlington Railway intersects this township, and its Yarm depôt, for coal and lime, is situated near the high road which passes towards the bridge. The Leeds Northern Railway, now a branch of the North-Eastern, enters the county of Durham at Egglescliffe by the Yarm Viaduct, a handsome structure of forty-three arches, each of about forty feet span. This township was anciently possessed by the Aislakbys, from whom it passed, in 1420, to the Astleys. In the following century the Garnetts became its proprietors; it afterwards passed to the Woods and the Ebstobs, and is now the property of the gentlemen above mentioned.

The Village of Egglescliffe is situated on the steep and lofty northern bank of the Tees, and overlooks the curve in that river which nearly surrounds the peninsula upon which the town of Yarm is situated. The time worn pedestal and mutilated shaft of an ancient cross stands in the open space in the centre of the village. A paper mill was commenced here in 1830, by Charles T. Bainbridge and Sons, the present proprietors; and, in 1832, a chemical works was begun at Early Nook, by Mr. Robert Wilson, by whom it is still carried on. Egglescliffe is connected with Yarm by a stone bridge, said to have been erected about the year 1400. It consisted originally of five pointed arches; and there is a tradition that the north arch was cut, and formed into a draw-bridge, during the civil wars, when Egglescliffe, with Stockton, was garrisoned by the royalists. The north arch has, since that time, been rebuilt in a semicircular form. An iron bridge was erected here in 1805, at a cost of £8,000, but, owing to some defect in its construction, it fell, in 1806, and has not since been restored.

The Parish Church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and stands near the brink of the declivity which slopes from the western extremity of the village to Yarm bridge. It consists of nave, chancel, south transept, and embattled tower, and will accommodate about 200 persons. The transept just mentioned bears the name of Pemberton's Porch, and under an arch in its south wall is a recumbent effigy of a knight in chain armour, fully armed, with the legs crossed, and the feet resting on a lion. The church contains several mural monuments. The parish register commences in 1539. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Stockton, valued in the Liber Regis at £28 17s. 1d.; gross income £1,120 per annum. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, Rev. Henry J. Maltby, M.A.

The Rectory is a substantial brick building, erected by the present rector, in 1845, on the site of the old rectory.

The Parochial School was erected in 1842, before which year the children for this parish had to go to Yarm.

Early Nook is a hamlet in this township, about three quarters of a mile north of Egglescliffe, where there is a chemical works belonging to Mr. Robert Wilson.

Charities.—William Hall, on the 16th February, 1660, gave £100 to purchase an annuity of £6, issuing out of four ox-gangs of arable land at Yarm, and which was to be distributed equally, by trustees, every 10th of December, to five poor widows dwelling in the parish, or in default of widows, to so many fatherless children under thirteen years of age, or in default of widows and children, to poor old men dwelling in Egglescliffe. The amount is distributed annually by the churchwardens to six poor widows.

NEWSHAM township, situated about three miles west of Yarm, is the property of Mrs. Marshall, and Messrs. Page and Swires. It comprises an area of 1,054 acres, which is divided into the four farms of Featherstone House, Newsham Hall, Newsham Grange, and White House, and its annual value is £965. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 34; in 1811, 35; in 1821, 44; in 1831, 58; in 1841, 57; and in 1851, 67. This township was in ancient times the property of the Aislakbys, and it afterwards became the seat of the Halls, who were descended from the Halls of Gretford, in the county of Lincoln. The fourth possessor of the name, Christopher Hall, Esq., was charged with a horse and furniture for the service of Charles I., and compounded for his estate for £460. Lodowick Hall, his son and heir, was for some time of Great Chilton (for which estate he also compounded for £419 11s. 5d.), and was a justice of the peace for the county. With Christopher, his son, he sold Newsham to Robert Blakiston, of Old Elvet, whose great-grandson, the Rev. Robert Blakiston, held lands in Newsham in 1798. The Coatsworth family also had possessions here.

Directory.—The farmers are, Nicholas Bell, Newsham Grange; Edward Braithwaite, Newsham Hall; John Garbutt, White House; Mary Pyburn, Newsham Grange; and Thomas Sowerby, Featherstone House.

ELTON PARISH.

This small parish, which comprises no dependant townships, is bounded on the north by the parishes of Norton and Redmarshall, on the north-west by Bishopton, on the south-west and south by Long Newton, and on the east by the township of Hartburn, in the parish of Stockton. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 78; in 1811, 76; in 1821, 105; in 1831, 103; in 1841, 92; and in 1851, 84. Its area is 1,419 acres, and the value of property assessed for the county-rate in 1853 was £895. Elton, with Barnton and Skerningham, were given by Bishop Aldune, as a marriage portion with his daughter Ecgfrida, to Uchtred, Earl of Northumberland, who, tiring of her, sent her back to her father, and her dowry was restored to the bishop. She afterwards married Kilvert, a Yorkshirethane, who also sent her back, and at length became a nun, and was buried in the cemetery at Durham. Maud, cousin to Robert Bruce, gave four oxgangs of land at Elton to Guisborough Priory, during the episcopate of Bishop Kellaw. About the year 1200, the manor of Elton belonged to William de Homez, and was afterwards vested for several descents in the family of Gower, from whom, in 1546, one moiety descended to Laurence Tregoz or Thorowgood. The other moiety had become vested, before 1435, in the family of Bowes, and afterwards passed by marriage to Sir Cuthbert Collingwood, by whom it was sold, in 1573, to Thomas Sergeantson, of Preston-le-Skerne; and John Thomas and Christopher Jefferson, of Elton, yeomen. The other half shortly afterwards became vested in the family of Errington. John Errington, Esq., of Elton, was a colonel in the service of Charles I., and named a delinquent in the ordinance of parliament 1644. On the petition of his wife, Mrs. Mary Errington, a fifth-part of his estates at Elton, Egglescliffe, and elsewhere, was allowed for the maintenance of herself and her family. He died in 1666; and John Errington, his son, who had also been a lieutenant-colonel in the royal army, sold his estate in Elton, in 1682, to Robert Shafto, Esq., recorder of Newcastle. Elton is now the property of John S. Sutton, Esq., and John Leaper, Esq.

The Village of Elton is situated on the road between Stockton and Darlington, about three miles from the former place,

The Parish Church is a neat stone building in the Gothic style, erected, in 1840, on the site of the old church, and consists of a nave, chancel, and south porch, with a bell turret at the western gable. The eastern window is filled with stained glass, containing representations of the Crucifixion and Resurrection, erected to the memory of the late G. W. Sutton, Esq., by his widow. A recumbent effigy of a knight in armour, which formerly lay beneath an arch in the north wall of the nave, is now placed within the altar rails. The parish register commences in 1573. From William de Homez, the advowson of Elton passed to the Gowers and Boweses, and afterwards to the Erringtons and Jeffersons. The Erringtons' right of presentation passed, with their property, to the Shaftos, and is now held by J. S. Sutton, Esq.; and the turn of the Jeffersons is supplied by T. and J. Hogg, Esqs. The benefice, a rectory, is a discharged living, in the deanery of Stockton, valued in the Liber Regis at £7 6s. 5½d.; gross income, £180. Incumbent—Rev. James Milner.

Elton Hall, the property and residence of John S. Sutton, Esq., is a handsome modern mansion, with beautiful plantations and grounds.

LONG NEWTON PARISH.

Long Newton parish is bounded on the north-east and north by the parishes of Elton and Bishopston, on the west by the chapelry of Sadberge, on the south-west by Middleton St. George parish, on the south and south-east by Egglecliffe, and on the east by the township of Preston, in the parish of Stockton. It forms only one constabulary or township, which comprises Coatham Conyers, Coatham-Stob, and Goosepool. The latter is attached to this parish in ecclesiastical matters, but for other purposes it is said to be in Middleton-St.-George parish. Long Newton parish comprises an area of 4,544 acres, and the value of property assessed for the county-rate in 1853 was £3,224 14s. The population in 1801 was 295; in 1811, 253; in 1821, 338; in 1831, 313; in 1841, 293; and in 1851, 325 souls. The Stockton and Darlington Railway passes through this parish. Long Newton was anciently held by the Baliols, under, or as a member of, the great lordship of Gainford; and, after their forfeiture, it was held of the Beauchamps, earls of Warwick, their successors in the honour of Barnard Castle, under whom the Surtees family held a house and 100 acres of land at 13s. 4d. yearly. The families of Killinghall and Conyers (of Coatham Conyers) afterwards held lands here. On the attainder of Ralph Conyers, in 1565, his estates here were forfeited to the crown, and were granted by Queen Elizabeth, in 1578, to Sir Roger Manners, Knt. It subsequently passed to the Vane family, and is now possessed by the Marchioness of Londonderry, John Sutton, Esq., Marshall Fowler, Esq., and the Rev. Richard Waldy. The Marchioness of Londonderry is lady of the manor.

The Village of Long Newton is situated on the road between Stockton and Darlington, and extends to within four-and-a-half miles of the former, and six miles of the latter town. There are brick and tile works here, carried on by the Marchioness of Londonderry.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1806, and consists of a nave and chancel, without transepts or tower. The eastern window is divided into three compartments, and filled with stained glass; in the centre is a figure of Our Saviour, and on each side are representations of the Nativity and the Baptism by St. John. In the middle window on the south side of the nave, are two highly finished representations of Sts. Peter and Paul, introduced, at the expense of the rector, in memory of Bishop Van Mildert. The church is the family burial place of the Vanes, and contains several monuments to their memory. The last person interred in the family vault within the altar rails, was the late marquis, whose remains were deposited in their last resting place, the 16th March, 1854. There was formerly a chantry in this church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; but when or by whom founded does not appear. The parish register commences in 1564. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Stanhope, valued in the Liber Regis at £20; gross income, £634. Patron—the Bishop of Durham; rector—the Rev. Thomas H. Dyke.

The Parsonage is a good house, situated to the north of the church, and with its appurtenances, was built by the Rev. J. Finney, rector. The tithes of the parish were commuted in 1836.

Coatham Conyers is an estate in this parish, and was, in the fourteenth century, held of the Surtees family by the Conyers, of Sockburn, who forfeited it on the failure of the northern rebellion, and the estate was granted by Queen Elizabeth to Roger Manners. It was afterwards held by the Ramsays, the Crossleys, the Bowyers, the Micklethwaites, and the Dennissons: it is now the property of J. S. Sutton, Esq., of Elton. The old mansion occupies a secluded situation, and some of its rooms contain good specimens of antique panelling.

Goosepool is a name applied to three farms attached to this parish, to the rector of which they pay tithes, though they join with the parish of Middleton-St.-George in the payment of poor-rates.

Charities.—Thomas Barker, by will, May 22nd, 1686, gave to this parish 20s. yearly, payable out of his lands at East Newbiggin. It is divided equally between ten poor and aged persons of the parish, widows being preferred. — Carter left the sum of £2 10s. for the benefit of the poor. This sum is vested in the hands of the incumbent for the time being, who pays 2s. 6d. interest, which is given away to one poor person on Candlemas-day, with the produce of the preceding charity.

MIDDLETON ST. GEORGE PARISH.

This parish which comprises no dependant townships, is bounded on the north-east by Long Newton, on the north by Haughton-le-Skerne, on the west by Dinsdale, on the south by the river Tees, and on the east by Egglecliffe; extending to within two-and-a-half miles west of Yarm, and four-and-a-half east, by south of Darlington. Its area is 2,050 acres, and its annual value £3,157 5s. 6d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 215; in 1811, 202; in 1821, 209; in 1831, 299; in 1841, 433; and in 1855, 332. The village of Middleton-one-Row, and the hamlet called Oak Tree, are the only assemblages of houses in the parish. The Stockton and Darlington Railway extends into this parish. At the time of King Richard's grant of the wapentake of Sadberge to Bishop Pudsey, the son of Godfrey Board owned the service of two parts of a knight's fee for Middleton and Hartburn. The Sertees are the next proprietors on record, and, in 1320, Rowland Bart died seised of half the manor, which he held by homage, fealty, and suit, at the court of Sadberge. In 1337, Robert de Cambe held half a messuage and 30 acres in Lower Middleton. The manor shortly afterwards passed to John de Killynghall, a justice itinerant under Cardinal Langley, in 1413, and continued in the direct line of the family till Francis Killinghall sold his estates in 1569, and, in 1587, died an officer in the garrison at Berwick. A third of the manor, however, seems to have been vested in a younger branch of the Killinghalls; and, after passing through the hands of various proprietors, was re-united to that family by purchase from Richard Madox, in 1606. It remained the property of the Killinghalls till 1762, when John Killinghall dying without issue, devised his estate to his kinsman, William Pemberton, Esq., whose son, William, bequeathed it to his paternal aunts, of the family of Cocks, of Plymouth, H. A. W. Cocks, Esq., being the present proprietor. The other landowners are W. F. Addison, Esq., and Sir William Clavering.

The Village of Middleton-one-Row, or Over Middleton, is situated five miles east-south-east from Darlington, and consists principally of one long row of good houses, near the bank of the Tees. Owing to its proximity to the Dinsdale Baths, this place has much improved of late years; an inn on an extensive scale has been built, and many private dwellings, suitable for the accommodation of respectable parties, have been erected. An omnibus plies between the village and the Middleton station of the Stockton and Darlington Railway.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St. George, is situated on elevated ground, to the south-east of the village of Middleton-one-Row; and is a small plain structure, consisting of a nave and chancel. It will accommodate 150 persons. William Killinghall, in 1521, by will, charged his estates "for the sustentacion of an honest preste, which I will shall syng for the sowles of me, myn auncestors and heires in the pariche church of Midilton George by the space of seven yerres next after my death, receyving yearly for his salary vij markes." The parish register commences in 1650. The living is a discharged rectory, in the deanery of Stockton, valued in the Liber Regis at £3 13s. 1½d.; gross income £100. Patron, Henry A. W. Cocks, Esq.; rector, Rev. Henry Greaves. At present the patron has a moiety of the great tithes and the incumbent the remainder.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here.

The Parish School was erected by subscription about the year 1768; and after the completion of the building, there was a balance of £75, which was placed in the hands of the Rev. William Addison, who promised to pay the same, with interest at four per cent, to the trustees of the school. The sum of £3 is paid annually as interest to the schoolmaster. The master resides in the school-house, which, with the school-room, was almost entirely rebuilt in 1828. The school is attended by about thirty children, all of whom pay for their education.

Here is also an excellent boarding school, efficiently conducted by Mr. Michael Darling, of Middleton Hall.

West Hartburn.—The name of Goosepool is now locally applied to the whole of West Hartburn, though it properly belongs only to that part of the vill which is within the parish of Long Newton. The village is near the north-eastern verge of the parish of Middleton.

Oak Tree is a hamlet five-and-a-half miles east from Darlington, and derives its name from the sign of a public-house. Fighting Cocks is another hamlet, partly in this and Low Dinsdale parishes, situated on the Darlington and Yarm-road, about a mile from Middleton-one-Row. Here is a station on the Stockton and Darlington Railway; and, during the summer months, an omnibus from Middleton-one-Row meets the trains.

Charities.—Besides the school endowment, two yearly sums of 8s. each were formerly paid for the benefit of the poor of this parish from lands supposed to have been charged with the payment. These have been discontinued for many years, and there appears no means of compelling their renewal.

NORTON PARISH.

This parish, which comprises the manor of Blakiston, but forms only one township, is bounded on the north-east and north by Billingham parish, on the north-west by Grindon, on the west by Redmarshall, and on the south and east by Stockton. Its area is 4,614 acres, and the annual value of property assessed to the county-rate in 1853 was £9,628 10s. The population in 1801 was 965; in 1811, 1,053; in 1821, 1,186; in 1831, in consequence of the employment of a number of labourers on the railway-works, it was 1,486; in 1841, 1,623; and in 1851, 1,725 souls. The Clarence Railway extends into this parish. Norton, anciently Normanton, is a member of one of the bishop's great manors; and at the time of the compilation of the Boldon Book, "there were here thirty villans, each holding two oxgangs of land under the same rents and services as those of Boldon, except cornage, which they did not pay, as they had no pasturage. There were twenty farmers, each holding two oxgangs, and paying half a mark. Each of them ploughed and harrowed half an acre of the lord's demesne, provided two men two days in reaping and the like at haymaking, and two wains for one day, or one wain for two days, to load corn; and all of them jointly tilled four portions in autumn, with all their families, except the housewives. Adam, of Norton, held a caracute for 10s., and provided thirty-two men for one day, or the same quantity of labour, with four wains; and his men and their families were to till four portions, but he and his household were to be clear. Adam, son of Gilbert de Herdwick, held thirty-six acres of the land of Norton, near Herdewyc, as tenant at will, under two marks rent. The mills had eight acres allotted to them, and the Mill-Meadow, and paid twenty marks. The punder had four acres, and the thraves of corn, like other punders, and paid four score hens and five hundred eggs. Twelve cottagers held tofts and crofts, and thirteen acres in Norton fields, paying 6s., and each giving fourteen days' work within the year, and altogether tilling four portions of land in autumn. The north meadows were in the bishop's hands. Norton paid 3s. for toll of ale, and the whole vill provided two milch cows. In Bishop Hatfield's Survey, the tenants are distinguished into tenants in drengage, free tenants, bond tenants, selfodes, cottagers, and tenants-by-exchequer rents. Sir George Fulthorp, Knt., held Adam de Normanton's tenure in drengage, which, from an intermediate occupier, was now called Lucasford, comprising two messuages and a caracute of eight oxgangs, each containing fifteen acres. The whole of the services were commuted for 9s. 10d. rent at Michaelmas, and 10s. exchequer rent. There were twenty-four bond tenants, each holding two oxgangs, at the usual rent and services. Every two of them were privileged to erect a booth at St. Outhbert's fair; and when required, they were, in every year to build a house. The selfodes paid 3d. to the lord yearly; the punder four score hens at Christmas and five hundred eggs at Easter. There were eleven cottagers. The tenants held two acres and a rood called Punderland, and paid 2s. 7d. William Etyts and three others held the common forge, 18d.; John Mageon a dove cot, 6d. The tenants paid 66s. 8d. for the common bakehouse, 10s. for toll of ale, and 12s. in lieu of two milch cows. The Norton, Stockton, and Hartburn Mills, were let with their lands, Milnecrock, Segercrock, Crawcock, and Longacre. The Exchequer lands were these formerly held by bond tenants. The holders of them carried timber and millstones for Norton and Stockton Mills, and ground their corn at a thirtieth part mulcture. Whenever the bishop repaired or rebuilt his manor house at Stockton, they were to carry his timber for that purpose; and they were also to carry the bishop's wine from Tees and water into his cellar at Stockton, by virtue of their oath, and by tenure of the manor. All these services were compounded for 15s. 9½d. The records contain notices of a few scattered freeholds. The Fulthorps and their descendants long continued to hold lands in Norton." The principal part of the property in this parish is still held by lease, or by copy of court roll, under the see of Durham. The principal copyholders are Hamilton Russell, Esq., John J. Hogg, Esq., William Grey, Esq., Thomas R. Grey, Esq., John Page, Esq., William S. Grey, Esq., — Sutton, Esq., John Fox, Esq., Thomas Fox, Esq., Mr. John Chapman, Mr. Arthur Strother, and Messrs. Owen and Ayres. The Bishop of Durham is lord of the manor.

The Village of Norton occupies a pleasant situation on the turnpike road between Stockton and Sunderland, about two miles north of the former place. At the north end is a spacious green, surrounded by houses. It comprises a post office, rural police station, an extensive tannery, and two breweries. Near the village there are two furnaces in course of erection by the West Hartlepool Iron Company, for the purpose of making pig iron. A number of market gardeners around the village supply it and the town of Stockton with the produce. In consequence of its healthful situation, Norton has long been a favourite place of residence with many of the professional gentlemen, merchants, &c., of Stockton.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands on the highest ground in the village, towards the north, and was originally a cruciform structure, with a square central tower; but the south transept has been considerably shortened. It was repaired and restored in 1823, and will now accommodate about 850 persons. The south transept was anciently called "Pity Porch," from its being dedicated to Our Lady of Pity; and the north transept bore the name of "Blakiston Porch." The latter contains several monuments of that family, and possesses a small gallery, erected in 1854. This porch formerly contained a recumbent effigy, which is now placed on the south side of the chancel, and represents a knight in armour, with a rich canopy of tabernacle work over the head, the hands elevated, and the legs crossed, the feet resting on a lion. The church contains a fine painting of the recognition of Our Saviour by the two disciples at Emmaus, formerly an altar-piece in a Benedictine Convent, on the continent. On the south side of the chancel there is a neat stained-glass window, placed there in 1853. By papal rescript, Norton was made a collegiate church by Bishop Carileph, for the maintenance of the secular canons whom he had removed from Durham; and consisted, after 1227, of eight prebendaries, whose incomes were estimated, in 1291, at £6 per annum; but the total value in 1534 was £4 6s. 8d. each, or £34 18s. 4d. in the whole. The living is now a vicarage, in the deanery of Stockton, valued in the Liber Regis at £31 11s. 5½d.; gross income £379. The parish register commences in 1574. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; incumbent, the Hon. and Rev. Francis N. Clements, B.A.

The Vicarage House is situated near the church, and is surrounded by fine plantations and gardens. The glebe consists of above 279 acres.

The Wesleyan Methodists and the Society of Friends have places of worship here.

The Grammar School.—Certain lands in this parish, for the support of the school, have been held under the see of Durham, on leases for three lives, at least since the year 1650. The dwelling-house, garden, and school-room, which are freehold, are occupied by the master rent free. These, with other property, producing an income of £38 15s. per annum, are enjoyed by the master, who, in respect of them, is required to teach six poor boys of the parish, appointed by the vicar, without any charge. There are at present fifty-five other boys attending the school, who pay for their instruction. William Robinson Bell, master.

Besides the Grammar School, there is a National School, and some respectable boarding and day schools.

While the wapentake of Sadberge was vested in the crown, Henry II. granted a weekly market to Norton on the Lord's-day. The necessity for this market may be surmised from the extent of the parish, which at that time included Stockton, Hartburn, and Preston.

Norton House is a handsome mansion, the property and residence of John Hogg, Esq., whose ancestors have long resided in the neighbourhood.

Blackiston is an ancient manor, occupying the north-western portion of the parish of Norton, and was granted, in 1093, by Bishop Carileph to the prior and monks of Durham. The estate was granted by the community to the family of Park, one of whom is mentioned as of Blackiston in 1264. It afterwards passed to a family bearing the local name, with whom it continued till 1615, when it was sold by Sir Thomas de Blackiston to Alexander Davison, merchant, of Newcastle, and is now possessed by G. F. H. Russell, Viscount Boyne. Of the old hall of the Blackistons, the only remaining portion is at present occupied by Mr. Joseph Wanless, market gardener.

Charities.—John Thompson, by deed, 1st George IV., gave certain lands in the parish, producing £6 3s. per annum, in trust for the poor, and for upholding and maintaining the church at Norton. A field, near the village, containing about four acres, is now let for £14 a-year, which has for many years been carried to the account of the church-rate; and two other closes, containing together five or six acres, are let for £9, which is carried to the account of the poor-rate.—John Snowdon, by will, date unknown, gave to the vicar and churchwardens of Norton, £100 three-per-cent reduced annuities, the interest to be divided amongst four decayed housekeepers belonging to the parish. The dividends are paid over to the vicar and churchwardens, who divide the amount amongst five or more poor widows, a preference being given to those of shoemakers.

Eminent Men.—Amongst the many notabilities of Norton, we find the following:—Mr. Middleton, the celebrated navigator, who was first employed to find the north-west passage; Jeremiah Moore, Esq., who, according to Hutchinson, was taken, by means of his elder brother, into slavery, and, escaping from the hardships of that state, was pressed into the navy, in which he was serving in the Mediterranean, when his brother's death placed him in an independent position, after which he settled at Norton, and spent the remainder of his life in acts of benevolence; Anthony White, Esq., thrice president of the Royal College of Surgeons; and Thomas Baker, or, as he was more commonly called, "Potato Tom," who is said to have been the first to introduce the potato into the county of Durham.

REDMARSHALL PARISH.

Redmarshall parish, comprising the townships of Carleton, Redmarshall, and Stillington, is bounded on the north by Grindon and Sedgfield, on the west by Stainton-le-Steeet and Bishopton, on the south by Elton, and on the east by Norton. The townships of Carleton and Redmarshall are included in the Stockton poor-law union, and that of Stillington in Sedgfield union.

CARLETON township is the property of the Rev. Edward Davison, Robert Wardell, Esq., the trustees of the late Thomas Hutchinson, Esq., and Captain Ellis. The Bishop of Durham claims the manorial rights of the copyhold property, and the landowners of that held by freehold tenure. The area of the township is 1,453 acres, and its annual value £1,491. The population in 1801 was 99; in 1811, 105; in 1821, 140; in 1831, 183; in 1841, 157; and in 1851, 186 souls. The Clarence Railway extends into this township. Carleton was one of the places which had been seized and detained from the see of Durham by the "men of Northumberland," and of which restitution was ordered by the charter of Henry I. From Boldon Book we learn that there were twenty-three farmers here, holding twenty-six ox-gangs of land by the usual tenures. Under Hatfield's Survey, some of the services were commuted for money payments; but the drengage lands were held subject to suitable service till the reign of Elizabeth.

The Village of Carleton is about four miles to the north-west of Stockton.

REDMARSHALL township contains 956 acres, and the annual value of property assessed for the county rate in 1853 was £670. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 60; in 1811, 76; in 1821, 75; in 1831, 56; in 1841, 48; and in 1851, 76 souls. The first notice of Redmarshall occurs in a charter to Finchale Priory, in which Emma, Lady of Redmarshall, is mentioned. It afterwards became the property of the see of Durham, and was given by Bishop Beck to his brother, John Beck, who sold it to Thomas Moulton, from whom it passed to Sir Henry Lisle, Knt., lord of the manor of Wynyard. A third of the manor was subsequently held by the Langtons, Claytons, Merleys, Buckles, Places, Bromleys, and Spearman; and in 1750, the trustees under the will of Gilbert Spearman conveyed it and a third of Claxton's Porch to John Tempest, Esq., of Wynyard, for £3,540, from whom it descended to the Marchioness of Londonderry. The principal proprietors, besides the Marchioness of Londonderry, are John Eden, Esq., George Hutchinson, Esq., and James Forster, Esq., each of whom claims the manorial rights of his own property.

The Village of Redmarshall is situated four-and-a-half miles north-west of Stockton.

The Church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a substantial stone building, consisting of nave, south porch, south transept, called Claxton's Porch, chancel, and square tower, and appears to have been erected about the 13th century. It underwent a series of improvements and restorations in 1845-6, at the expense of the rector, from designs furnished by his son, T. Austin, Esq., architect, Newcastle, who also provided designs and plans for the new rectory. On a broad altar tomb in Claxton's Porch, are two recumbent figures, male and female, of elegant alabaster work, but much defaced by time and neglect. The parish register commences in 1564. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Stockton, valued in the Liber Regis at £17 18s. 1½d.; gross income, £365. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, Rev. Thomas Austin, M.A.

The Rectory is an elegant building in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1845, at a cost of £1,000, principally defrayed by the rector. The glebe consists of rather more than six acres; and the rector is generally entitled to all tithes.

The School and teacher's house were erected by subscription in 1847, on land given by James Pallister, Esq., who also endowed the school with £10 per annum towards the support of teachers.

Charities.—Church Rents.—The churchwardens received 2s. 6d. from an estate at Stillington, 3s. 4d. from an estate at Redmarshall, and 4s. from two estates at Carlton, making a total of 9s. 10d. The origin of these payments, which were applicable to the repairs of the church, is unknown; and, of late years, nothing has been received for this purpose. Christopher Morpeth, by will, January 10th, 1640, gave to the poor of the parish a rent charge of £3, payable out of his lands in Bishopton Field, called the Hyets; £1 10s. to the poor of Stillington, and the remainder to those of Redmarshall and Carlton, in equal portions, at Easter and Christmas; also 20s. yearly out of the same estate, 10s. to Stillington, and 10s. to Redmarshall and Carlton, to be given every New Year's Day. These sums are distributed by the overseers amongst the poor of the respective townships in sums varying from 8s. to 10s.

STILLINGTON township comprises an area of 1,104 acres, and its annual value is £1,042. It contained in 1801, 69 inhabitants; in 1811, 42; in 1821, 49; in 1831, 96; in 1841, 67; and in 1851, 70 souls. The Clarence Railway extends into this township. Stillington is detached from the rest of the parish by a junction of Bishopton and Grindon, and is included in the Sedgfield Poor Law Union. From an early date, lands in this township have been held by Merton College, Oxford. William de la Pole held five acres here of the master of Merton Hall, by the service of a rose; and the same service recurs in the escheat on Michael, Earl of Suffolk, in the tenth-year of Bishop Langle. Stillington furnished five followers to the northern rebellion, one of whom suffered death for the offence.

STOCKTON PARISH.

This parish was anciently included in that of Norton, and contained a chapel-of-ease to the mother church; but the trade and importance of the town increasing, and the chapel falling into decay, an act of parliament was obtained in the year 1711, to make Stockton, with East Hartburn and Preston, a separate parish. Two years later, another act was passed to amend and explain the former. The parish of Stockton, as thus constituted, is bounded on the east and north by the parishes of Billingham and Norton; on the west by Elton, Long Newton, and Eggescliffe; and on the south and south-east by the river Tees. It includes the four constaberies of the borough of Stockton, the copyhold township of Stockton, East Hartburn, and Preston-on-Tees.

EAST HARTBURN township, situated to the west of Stockton, is principally the property of John Stapleton Sutton, Esq., the trustees of the late John Alderson, Archdeacon Hill, and others. It contains 1,020 acres, and its annual value is £1,326 15s. The population in 1801 was 104; in 1811, 115; in 1821, 121; in 1831, 152; in 1841, 195; and in 1851, 174 souls. At the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, there were twelve villians in Hartburn, each holding two ox-gangs, and paying rent and services similar to those of Boldon, except cornage. Alanson of Osbert held an ox-gang; and three cottagers held two tofts, working fourteen days for the lord in harvest. The vill provided one milch cow. Ten caracutes of demesne, in Stockton and Hartburn, were on lease, and rendered twenty chalders of wheat. In Hatfield's survey, the only free tenant named is John Laken, who held by charter and knight's service, and aiding to clean the stream and pool of Norton Mill. William Baron, besides the other messuages and ox-gangs, held, with his fellows, a plot of ground on North Deynside. Three cottagers and various other tenants are named. Six persons from Hartburn were implicated in the Rising of the North, one of whom was afterwards executed.

The Village of East Hartburn is situated on the brook from which it derives its name, on the road from Stockton to Darlington, one-and-a-half miles west-south-west from the former place.

Charity.—Thomas Gibson bequeathed to the poor of this township £50, the interest of which was to be distributed to them in white bread every Sunday, at the communion table, in Stockton Church; or, failing them, to the other poor then present. This sum appears to have been carried to the account of the church-rate, as 20s. is paid thereout yearly, and disposed of in the manner as directed.

The Inexhaustible Blue Cap Bottle.—So far back as the year 1779, a pair of blue caps built their nest and brought up their young in a large stone-bottle which had been left to drain on the lower branches of a plum-tree, from the farm-house, now occupied by Mr. Callender, in this township. During this long period, seventy-six years, this bottle, with the exception of the year 1851, has been annually tenanted in the breeding season, from generation to generation, by these little gay-plumaged visitors, and as they generally lay each year about fourteen eggs, it may be fairly computed that this wonderful inexhaustible bottle has been the birth place of above a thousand blue caps. Above thirty years ago, the tree upon whose boughs the bottle was first placed, having fallen into a state of decay, the bottle was placed on the branches of an adjoining plum-tree, to which it is now fastened with iron hoops. The little creatures, however, did not desert their favourite tenement by this change. In 1851, they made their appearance, as usual at the bottle; but the inmates of the farm-house having neglected to draw the previous year's nest out of it, the birds, not having room to build, were obliged to seek other quarters. The following year, however, they built again in their old residence, where they have since returned annually; and during the present year, 1855, brought forth a numerous progeny.

PRESTON-UPON-TEES township comprises an area of 1,108 acres, and its annual value is £1,848. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 64; in 1811, 62; in 1821, 57; in 1831, 76; in 1841, 111; and in 1851, 113. The landowners are Marshall Fowler, Esq., Thomas Garbutt, Esq., and Robert Wardell, Esq. This township adjoins those of Stockton and Hartburn on the south, and is bounded by the Tees on the east; and is intersected by the Stockton and Darlington Railway. The celebrated Whinstone dyke, described in the account of the geology of the county, here enters Durham from the east-south-east. In this place, it is seventy-five feet wide, and has been quarried to a considerable depth. The whinstone is of a very fine grain, very hard, and of a dark grey or bluish black colour: it is disposed in large horizontal blocks, which intersect nearly at right angles a light coloured sandstone, and are covered with a thin crust of ferruginous ochre. The whole is capped by a bed of diluvium, forty-five feet in thickness, consisting of a different coloured clay, somewhat calcareous, and partaking of a gravelly nature. A little below the quarry, the basalt crops out into the bed of the river, and forms a portion of the western bank, four or five feet in height. From Boldon Book, we learn there were seven villans in Preston, holding and paying the same as in Hartburn, and there were six tenants. The whole vill furnished one milch cow. At the time of Hatfield's survey, John de Carrowe paid for the lands of Thomas de Seton, rents amounting to 38s. per annum. Three others are recorded as holding parcels of ground at various rents. This township was held, at an early date, by a family bearing the local name, from whom it was transferred, by marriage to the Edens. It afterwards beame the property of various families, and is now held by the gentlemen above-mentioned.

Preston Hall, the seat of Marshall Fowler, Esq., is beautifully situated on the northern bank of the Tees, and commands picturesque and extensive views of the surrounding country.

THE TOWN OF STOCKTON.

Stockton, inclusive of the borough and copyhold township, contains 3,032 acres, and its annual value is £80,604. The population in 1801 was 4,009; in 1811, 4,229; in 1821, 5,006; in 1831, in consequence of the formation of railways to the coal fields and the progress of trade in the port, it had increased to 7,768; in 1841, to 9,825; and, in 1851, it had attained to 10,172; of whom 4,766 were males, and 5,406 females. These figures show an increase of upwards of 150 per cent during the last half century. The number of inhabited houses, in 1851, was 1,975; of uninhabited, 128, and there were three in course of erection. The Stockton and Darlington Railway has an extent of two miles, and the Clarence Railway of upwards of a mile in the township. The origin of Stockton cannot now be ascertained, and its early history is lost in the mists of past ages; but its antiquity may be inferred from its giving name to one of the wards of the county. It has been supposed that the castle and manor of Stockton belonged, about the time of the Conquest, to some of the Norman barons, by whom they were given to the see of Durham; as, although a member of the wapentake of Sadberge, this place was part of the possessions of the see previous to the purchase of that earldom. It is from the Boldon Book that we acquire the earliest authentic account of the episcopal manor at this place; and, according to that authority, there were eleven-and-a-half tenures in villenage, each tenure consisting of two ox-gangs, the rents and services of which were the same as those of Boldon, with the exception of cornage. There were also six farmers who held nine ox-gangs of land in farm, and whose rents and services were similar to those of Norton. Adam Fitz-Walter held a caracute and an ox-gang under one mark rent. William de Tumba held three ox-gangs for half a mark, and one ox-gang by permission of the bishop, and was quit of all services so long as he remained in the bishop's service ; but on quitting it, he was to work as Walter did for his half caracate. Robert held the old half toft near his dwelling for 10d. rent. Elwin and Robert, cottagers, paid 12d. for two tofts ; Goderic, the cottager, 6d ; and Suane, the smith, 4d. for a toft. The punder held six acres, and had the thraves of Stockton and Harteburn rendering four score hens and 500 eggs. The passage of the Tees paid 20d. and the whole vill provided one milch cow. One ox-gang, which the bishop held across the Tees opposite the hall, paid 4s. In the reign of Richard Cœur de Lion, "Robert de Stoketon sailed Bishop Pudsey's great ship to London ;" and tradition informs us that Bishop Pictavia was visited at Stockton by King John, who, a few years afterwards, dated his charter of privileges to the burgesses of Newcastle from this place, February 5th, 1214. Bishop Poor built a chapel at Stockton to St. Thomas the Martyr. When Bishop Farnham resigned the see of Durham, he reserved for himself, by Papal license, the manors of Stockton, Easington, and Howden, to the former of which places he retired. He gave four ox-gangs, and the toft and croft which belonged to Matildis de Cumba, to the chapel of St. Thomas, and died at Stockton in 1257. Bishop Stichill, in the first year of his episcopacy, granted to "Gamellus de Jarve (Jarrow) four ox-gangs of land in the vill of Stockton, and one acre and one rood of meadow at Haleshalnes in the said vill, in perpetual fee, rendering and paying for the bishop's life half a mark of silver, and after his decease 20 shillings per each year ; and that the said Gamellus shall grind his grain which shall grow on the said land at the bishop's mill of Stockton." The time when Stockton was incorporated as a borough is not known with any degree of certainty ; but it is supposed to have received this privilege from King John in 1201, when he granted the charter of incorporation to Hartlepool. Bishop Beck, in 1310, granted to Stockton a market upon every Wednesday for ever, and an annual fair upon the feast of the translation of St. Thomas of Canterbury, to continue eight whole days. Stockton is mentioned as one of the places destroyed by the Scots in 1333 ; and a naval force was consequently stationed at the mouth of the Tees. The town, however, seems to have speedily revived, and its trade and prosperity continued to increase. Bishop Kellaw rebuilt the castle and manor-house at Stockton in a very elegant style, which, afterwards, during the residence of Bishop Matthew, in 1597, was partly consumed by fire.

In Hatfield's Survey there is a very circumstantial account both of the borough and manor, within the former of which there were thirty-nine tenants, and without it forty-six. The number of free tenants was seven. Stockton, Norton, and Cloxton are recorded amongst the places destroyed by the Scots in the reign of Edward II. The later prelates of Durham only occasionally resided at Stockton, though the castle was repaired by Bishop Barnes in 1578. In 1569, nine of the inhabitants of the town were implicated in the Northern Rebellion, two of whom suffered death in consequence. In the summer of 1597, Bishop Matthew removed to Stockton to avoid the plague, which raged at Durham ; and in 1602 Nicholas Fleatham, mayor, and the burgesses, petitioned the bishop for a renewal of the charters of Bishop Beck, as, they alleged, the market and fair had for many years been discontinued. The desired charter was granted June 4th, 44th Elizabeth. Soon, afterwards, however, the inhabitants disputed with the bishop the right of receiving duties from ships coming into the port for anchorage and plankage. A decree of the bishop's court of chancery, 1620, decided the dispute in favour of the prelate, proving that those duties were paid in the time of Henry II., and that there was a staith or quay in the outer court of the bishop's castle of Stockton, at which ships coming into the port arrived, and that the said staith or quay had decayed within two or three years last past. Dr. Morton was the last bishop of Durham who resided at Stockton, whence he fled into Yorkshire, after the defeat of the royal army by the Scots at Newburn. According to the articles agreed upon betwixt the English and Scotch commissioners at Ripon, in 1640, concerning the cessation of hostilities, the river Tees was fixed upon as the boundary line between the two armies, "excepting always the town and castle of Stockton, and the village of Egglecliffe," which were still to be occupied by the king's troops. The castle of Stockton did not fall a sacrifice to the ravages of time, but to the distracted state of the kingdom; the order of parliament for the sale of the bishop's lands brought it into the hands of private persons, who appear to have demolished it for the sale of the materials with which some of the private houses in the town are said to have been built. On March 24th, 1647-8, Stockton manor was sold to William Underwood and James Nelthorpe for £6,165 10s. 2½d.; but the castle was not totally destroyed for four years afterwards. The demesne lands belonging to the castle at the period of its demolition were worth £218 1s. 1d. per annum, and consisted of the meadow or park lying under the castle wall, twenty-six acres; The Thornes, The Intack, and Horse Close, containing about fifty acres; the Park Heads, forty-five acres; Little Meadow Field, forty acres; Winter Field and Kelsoe Hill, forty acres; Midnight Hole, forty acres; and Smithy Hill and Orchard, all of which is very rich land, and now belongs to the bishop, by whom it is let for about £600 a-year. The bailiff of the borough was also the keeper of the castle, with the territories, gardens, and orchards belonging to it, and was allowed pasture, herbage, and hay, within the pastures of the bishop, for two horses and ten cows; together with a patent fee of £6 13s. 4d. per annum, and other profits, advantages, and emoluments of place.

In April, 1666, Stockton received a charter from Bishop Cosin, for a fair and market, similar to those granted by Bishops Beck and Matthew. At the same time, it was represented that there were "divers large and spacious fields and parcels of ground lying and being within the township territories of Stockton, which lay in common and undivided." The inclosure of these wastes created a spirit of improvement in the town, which has ever since prevailed.

THE TOWN of Stockton, which occupies the outer verge of an angle formed by the Tees, is 20 miles by road south-south-east from Durham, 27 south from Sunderland, 10 south-south-west from Hartlepool, 11 east-north-east from Darlington, and 242 north-north-west from London. It is described as "bounded on the east and south-east by a range of hills at a distance of fourteen miles or more from its site. On the east and north-west there is a general ascent from the estuary or bay towards the centre of the country. A funnel-like valley is thus formed between the high lands of Durham and the Cleveland Hills, through which the river Tees flows. The town is seated on a bed of diluvial clay of great thickness, overlaying a stratum of sandstone, which is principally visible in the bed of the Tees, at the great whin-dyke at Preston, because, it is said, of the immense thickness of the diluvian beds which occupy almost the entire country between Stockton and Darlington. The red marl between Yarm and Darlington is ascertained to be at least 120 fathoms thick. The upper soil is loamy, resting upon a stratum of gravel and sand, overlaying a solid blue clay."

High-street, the principal thoroughfare of Stockton, runs north and south and is about three quarters of a mile long: the southern portion, at the Market Place, being 180 feet wide. The houses in this street are chiefly modern erections; and here are situated the principal inns, shops, &c., of the town. Several streets and passages branch off from the High-street towards the river on the east; the first of these is Church-row, the front of which faces the parish church, and is continued towards the east by Paradise-row. In front of the latter is a spacious green, planted with trees and shrubs, called the Square. Other streets and lanes extend from Paradise-row to the railway. From the south-eastern corner of the Square, a lane leads in a south-east direction to Smithfield; and a line of pleasant houses, bearing the name of Cleveland-row, extends along the banks of the Tees. The south-west corner of the Square communicates with an open space called Thistle Green, formerly of greater extent. In this neighbourhood, the banks of the Tees, which here form a crescent, are bordered by a number of good houses, quays, wharfs, granaries, bond and other warehouses, breweries, manufactories, ship-building yards, &c. The next streets leading eastward from the High-street are Bishop-street and Silver-street, and further to the south is Finkle-street, which branches east from High-street to the river. Near the south-eastern corner of High-street, is Castlegate, which receives its name from its situation near the entrance of the ancient castle of Stockton. On the west side of High-street, near its northern extremity, is Bishopton-lane, from which the road to Durham branches to the north west. Opposite to the south end of High-street are the gas works, from the east end of which the New Walk extends in a south and south-east direction to the bridge over the Tees. This walk occupies the site of the western fosse of the castle; and near it is St John's Well. The walk was formed by subscription about half a century ago, and planted with trees by George Sutton, Esq. On the west side of the bridge-road is a large coal depôt, connected with the Stockton and Darlington Railway, which is continued from this place to the quays in the eastern part of the town. Various new streets and rows have been formed at the north side of Stockton during the last twenty years.

THE PARISH CHURCH, dedicated to St. Thomas, is situated in High-street, and is a spacious brick structure, with copings of freestone to the doors and windows. It is 150 feet in length by 67 in breadth, with a tower at the west end, containing a clock and a peal of six bells. The entrance is under the tower; the nave is separated from the aisle by five square pillars, supporting semicircular arches. There are three galleries, one of which, the western, contains a fine-toned organ. The east window contains a beautiful figure, in stained glass, of the Redeemer, bearing his cross, and surrounded by the accessories of the Passion. Above is the Hebrew name of Jehovah; and below, inscribed in a circle, in Old English characters, "He was despised and rejected of men." This window was executed by Mr. Gibson, of Newcastle, in 1828. Beneath it, in a recess, stands the communion table. The church, which will accommodate about 1,500 persons, is regularly stilled with oak; and the reading desk and pulpit are of excellent workmanship; it also contains several mural monuments. On the south side of the site occupied by the present church, there formerly stood a chapel-of-ease, under the parish church of Norton; it was dedicated to St. Thomas, and contained a free chantry, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and was endowed with four ox-gangs of land and four borough houses, which, in 1588, when the chantry was dissolved, were of the annual value of £5 3s. 6d. The ruinous state of the chapel, and the increased population of the town, at length rendered the erection of a new church necessary; and an act of parliament was obtained in 1711, for separating Stockton from the parish of Norton, and for making the present church parochial; the first stone of which was laid on the 5th June, 1710, and the edifice was consecrated by Bishop Crewe, on the 21st August, 1712, being then completed at a cost of about £1,600. Under the act of parliament just mentioned, and that of 1st Geo. I., 1714, the direction of parochial affairs is vested in the vicar and twelve vestry men, to whom the Bishop of Durham, lord of the manor, is empowered to grant, for the augmentation of the vicarage, a parcel of ground there specified, or any other parcel or parcels of waste ground within the manor, without fine, and under the custom and yearly rent of one penny, provided the same be not of more or greater yearly value than £20 at the time of making such grant. The new-constituted vicarage was entitled to all such tithes within its precincts as had been paid usually to the Vicar of Norton; and the patronage of the living was solely vested in the Bishop of Durham. The parish register commences in 1637. The living is a vicarage, not in charge, nor certificated, but pays a third part of the first-fruits, tenths, procurations, and synodals for the parish of Norton; gross income, £300. Vicar, Rev. F. J. James; curate, Joseph Richardson, B.A.

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, Yarm-lane, is a neat stone-structure, in the Gothic style, consisting of a nave, chancel, small southern transept, and western tower; the latter of which is carried up to the height of the roof, and then, taking the octagonal form above, with four flying buttresses at the base, terminates in a spire, 200 feet high. Each of the external angles of the nave and transept terminates with octangular pinnacles, the main walls finishing with a perforated battlement. The interior is remarkably plain; it has a low pitched open timber roof, a gallery on each side, and one at the west end, on which is placed an organ, by Nicholson, of Newcastle. The whole of the sittings are stained in imitation of oak, and afford accommodation for 1,200 persons. The church was erected in 1834-5. In February, 1836, a meeting was held in Stockton, for the purpose of dividing the town into ecclesiastical districts; and in December 1837, a district parish was assigned to the church, which was licensed by the Bishop of Durham, October 3rd, 1838, under 6 and 7 William IV. In 1851, the district contained 8,631 inhabitants. The living, which is stated to be worth £300 per annum, is in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. Richard Dutton Kennicott; Rev. John Rudd, curate.

ST. MARY'S (CATHOLIC) CHURCH occupies a commanding site in Norton-road, and has two large school-rooms and a burial ground adjoining. The present edifice, which comprises but a portion of the general design, was erected in 1841, from plans furnished by the lamented Pagin, and was opened in May 1842. The catholics of Stockton and its neighbourhood assembled in a chapel in Play House yard, until the erection of the present edifice by the Rev. J. Dugdale. The Rev. Joseph Cullen is the present priest.

THE BAPTIST CHAPEL, West Row, was originally built for a warehouse, but was converted to its present use in 1809, and has been for many years under the care of the Rev. William Leng, the present minister.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST CHAPEL, situated in Tennant-street, owes its origin to a dissension which took place in the Independent body in this town, and was erected in 1845.

THE FRIENDS' MEETING HOUSE, erected in 1814, at a cost of £1,800, is situated in Mill-lane, opposite the end of Brunswick-street, and will accommodate about 200 persons. There is a cemetery attached.

THE INDEPENDENT CHAPEL, West Row, was erected in 1815, at a cost of about £500; previous to this year the members of this body had a chapel in Green Dragon-yard, Finkle-street. Rev. Thomas Davison, minister.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHAPEL, Maritime-street, was erected in 1825, and contains about 350 sittings. Previous to the erection of this chapel, the congregation met in a room in Play House yard.

THE UNITARIAN CHAPEL is situated in High-street, and was rebuilt (on the site of a former chapel, erected in 1699) in 1756. It will accommodate about 300 persons, contains a fine organ, and has a good library attached. The Unitarians in Stockton, date from the seventeenth century. The Rev. Thomas J. Reed, minister.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL, West-row, was erected about the year 1812, and was formerly the property of the Independents. It contains sittings for 300 persons.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CHAPEL is in Brunswick-street; it was erected in 1832, and will accommodate 1,200 worshippers, has a Sunday-school and two dwelling houses for the preachers attached, and contains an excellent organ.

Besides these chapels, there is a Wesleyan Association Chapel, in Regent-street; a Wesleyan Reformers' Chapel, in Mill-lane; a Bethel Meeting House for sailors, on the Quayside; and a meeting room belonging to the Latter Day Saints, in Brunswick-street.

THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—In 1785, a spacious room was built by subscription, in West Row, for a Grammar School; the site of the building being leased to the corporation by the Bishop of Durham. The school was subsequently removed to a house in Skinner-street; and the building in West Row was sold in 1851. The master usually receives £76 from the corporation, on condition of teaching six poor boys recommended by the mayor.

THE CHARITY OR BLUE-COAT SCHOOL was founded by voluntary subscription in 1721, when a body of trustees was appointed, and it was resolved that a school room should be taken as near the church as possible; that a master should be appointed with a yearly salary of £20, to instruct twenty boys; and that the said boys should be clothed. In 1759, sixteen girls were added, and afterwards four more educated, and, though not clothed, eligible to enter the school in turn. In 1729, the trustees purchased the leasehold interest in two closes of meadow-land, in the townfields of Stockton, which were held under lease from the Bishop of Durham, for three lives, for £670, under a reserved rent of £5 3s. 4d. On May 24th, 1824, Bishop Barrington renewed the lease of this property at the yearly rent of £5. Six copyhold closes adjoining the town, and containing upwards of twenty-six acres, were purchased in 1772 for £1,635, of which £1,205 was advanced by Frances Stapylton. Two of the closes were sold in 1809 for £1,200; and the remainder of the money borrowed for the purchase has been paid off. The pecuniary legacies and donations, which furnished the means for making the above purchases, have, since 1721, amounted to £2,686 10s. The most important sums are, £100 given by Ficholas Swainston, £100 by Lord Crewe's trustees, £200 bequeathed by John Swainston, £1,000 bequeathed by George Brown, and £700 given by Bishop Barrington. The remainder is made up by sums varying from £5 to £50. The introduction of the national system of education having rendered increased accommodation necessary, the present spacious school rooms, with a garden and dwellings for the master and mistress, were erected in 1816, in Norton Road. Towards this object, £685 12s. 4d. was appropriated from the legacy of Mr. George Brown. The building is fifty-eight feet in length by thirty-four in breadth, and eighteen feet high. It bears an appropriate inscription. The income of the institution, arising from the leasehold and copyhold property above-mentioned, amounted to £199 10s. : but an act was passed, June 28th, 1833, to enable the trustees of the school to sell and dispose of certain lands and hereditaments belonging to the charity, and to purchase and acquire other lands in lieu thereof, and also the reversion of the lands held by them for lives. The powers thus given have been acted upon for the benefit of the charity, the income of which has by this means been much increased. The school is supplied with books, stationery, and materials for the girls' work, and is conducted according to certain rules agreed upon in 1814. The number of children now clothed, &c., is increased to forty boys and forty girls ; and the school is under government inspection.

TRINITY SCHOOLS.—These schools, which are in connection with Trinity Church, comprise a boys' school, a school of industry, and an infant school, and are situated in Yarm Lane ; the site of the buildings was given by the Bishop of Durham. The average number in attendance at the boys' school is about 103. The School of Industry was founded in Castlegate in 1803, for the gratuitous education and clothing of girls, and is supported by voluntary contributions. The average number of pupils is eighty-eight. Efforts are now being made to enlarge this establishment. The Infant School is attended by about ninety children. The whole of these schools are under government inspection.

In addition to the schools just mentioned, there are three boarding schools in Stockton. A National School, for boys, girls, and infants, was opened in April, 1847, in the Square ; and the British School, for children of both sexes, in Tennant-street, has four pupil teachers, and an average attendance of above 200 children. St. Mary's (Catholic) School, in Major-street, is attached to the church. Besides the two infant schools belonging to the National Schools, there is one in Regent-street ; there are also several day schools in the town, and a Ragged School, established in Castle Gate in 1853, and which is supported by subscription.

THE CHURCH LIBRARY, consisting chiefly of works on divinity, was founded in 1799, and owes its origin to Mr. John Stock, formerly a schoolmaster in Stockton, who having made a collection of books, gave them to the church of the town. The books are kept in the vestry room, and the subscription is 2s. per annum.

THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTION, situated on the north side of Dovecote-street, is a spacious building, comprising the usual rooms of such an establishment, and formerly served as the Corporation Hall ; but was purchased for its present purpose in 1851, at a cost of £1,100. The foundation stone of the building was laid on the 30th November, 1839, by Thomas Jennett, Esq., mayor of Stockton. The institution was founded in April, 1825, and at first occupied a large room in Mason's Court ; it is now in possession of a valuable library of near 2,000 volumes, besides a variety of apparatus and mechanical instruments, and a collection of minerals. Classes for instruction in various departments of science have long been established, and the institution now numbers upwards of 400 members.

THE SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, High-street, was commenced in July, 1791, and is supported by annual subscriptions of one guinea each from the members.

It comprises a large collection of works in the various departments of literature, science, and art.

THE SUBSCRIPTION NEWS-ROOM is in the Town Hall, and is well supplied with the various local and metropolitan papers, &c. The subscription is one guinea per annum.

THE DISPENSARY was founded in March, 1790, and affords medical and surgical relief to the poor of the town and neighbourhood. It originally occupied a portion of the workhouse; but on the erection of the present Almshouse in 1816, apartments therein were appropriated to this useful institution. Subscribers of one guinea and upwards per annum, and donors of ten guineas, are entitled to have at all times two patients on the books of the charity; each guinea subscribed, or each benefaction of ten guineas. Subscribers of less than one guinea are allowed to recommend two patients for each five shillings subscribed. R. H. Keenlyside, physician. Besides the dispensary, Stockton possesses the following societies, &c., for benevolent purposes:—A Society for the Relief of Lying-in-Women, which was commenced in 1817, and assists about seventy poor women annually; A Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge; A Town Mission; and an Auxiliary Bible Society.

THE TOWN HALL occupies the centre of High-street, and is a large and commodious square structure, over the principal entrance of which is sculptured the arms of the borough. The order of court for its erection is dated March 9th, 1733; but, in 1744, it was enlarged on the pulling down of the old Toll Booth. The Assembly Room, which occupies the upper portion of the building, is now to be converted into a council room, magistrates' room, and county court, instead of that portion of the Borough Hall which is used for those purposes: a portion of the first floor is to be appropriated for the town surveyor, news room, &c. On the centre of the building is a square tower, containing a clock; the top of the upper and diminished story of the tower is an entablature and balustrade, each corner of which is supported by two round columns, and the whole is surmounted by a spire. A little to the south of the Town Hall there was formerly an old covered cross, which being removed in 1708, was replaced by a handsome Doric column, thirty-three feet high, resting on a square base, which is approached on each side by four steps.

THE BOROUGH HALL, situated in High-street, near the south end of the town, was purchased by the corporation for £1,500, and was formerly the residence of the late Richard Dickson, Esq. The house in front admitted of easy conversion into a council chamber, justice room, offices, &c., and behind there was a spacious area, consisting of a yard and garden on which to build a hall. The adaptation of the premises to the intended purpose was intrusted to Mr. Clephan, architect, of Stockton, under whose direction the requisite alterations were made. The yard was covered with a ridged roof of glass, and forms a pleasant, sheltered approach from the house to the hall; its dimensions are seventy-two feet by thirty-three. A lobby, twenty-seven feet long by eight wide, with retiring rooms on each side, connects this approach with the hall itself, which is an elegant building, eighty feet long, thirty-six wide, and thirty-six high, and is used for public meetings, assemblies, &c. It was opened on the 15th May, 1852. The total cost of the Borough Hall amounted to £3,300.

THE BRIDGE over the Tees, connecting Durham with Yorkshire, was commenced in August, 1764, and completed in April, 1771, at a cost of £8,000. It consists of five arches, the span of the centre one being seventy-o feet, and it is twenty-three feet above low water mark; the two next are ty feet in span, and the end arches are forty-four feet. The carriage road eighteen feet wide, and there is a raised pavement of three feet broad for ot passengers, who, as well as carriages, &c., formerly paid toll each way; e tolls, however, ceased on the 1st January, 1820.

AMUSEMENTS.—The Theatre, situated in Playhouse Yard, presents no terior attractions; it is usually open about three months in the year, and on the whole fairly supported. The interior was renewed a few years ago. aces have been held at various times on the Carrs on the Yorkshire side of e Tees; the usual time for commencing them being the Thursday in the rst week after the York meeting. Regattas are occasionally held; and the uly English game of Cricket is not without its votaries; the cricket ground in Portrack-lane. Assemblies have been popular for many years, and music also much cultivated.

MARKETS, FAIRS, &c.—Markets are held here every Wednesday, and are ell supplied with all kinds of grain, butchers' meat, butter, eggs, vegetables, &c. A market, on a somewhat smaller scale, is also held on Saturday. A fair is held n Stockton annually, according to ancient charter, on the 18th July; and ther fairs are held on the Thursday before November 19th, and on November 23rd. Fairs for the sale of cattle, sheep, &c., established in 1811, were held n the last Wednesday in every month; in 1830, it was found necessary to horten that interval, and hold them once a fortnight; and on the 21st of January, 1851, a commencement was made of holding them weekly. In consequence of the opening of the Leeds Northern Railway, in 1853, which opened a communication with the manufacturing districts, a wool-market was established, with every prospect of success. A cheese-fair is also held annually. Iron-founding and engine-building are carried on here; there are also millwrights, brass founders and finishers, and other works, which afford employment to large numbers of the inhabitants. Messrs. Holdsworth, Bennington, Byers, &c., have established iron-works at Stockton, and possess three furnaces for the manufacture of pig-iron. Five millers and corn merchants carry on business in the town, generally by steam-power. This branch of business is extensive; the supply of grain from the surrounding agricultural districts, with that imported from other parts of England and abroad, being here converted into flour for the supply of the numerous mining population to the west and north, and also for transmission to Newcastle, Dundee, Aberdeen, Glasgow, and Edinburgh. There are also potteries here, and bricks and tiles are manufactured in the neighbourhood of the town. An extensive trade in lead is carried on, principally from the mines in Teesdale; and on the banks of the river, there are the ship-building yards of F. Goates, Quayside; and M. Pease & Co. iron shipbuilders, North Shore, each of which has a patent ship-way for the repairing of vessels. The banking business of the town is carried on by the banks of Messrs. Backhouse & Co., the National Provincial Bank of England, and the Darlington District Joint Stock Bank; the two former of whom have branch establishments in High-street, and the latter in Finkle-street. There is also a Savings' Bank, which was commenced in May 1816. Its business is transacted every Wednesday, in a room appropriated for the purpose, in the Alms-houses.

GAS AND WATER SUPPLY.—The town was first lighted with gas in November 1822, by "The Stockton Gas-Light and Coke Company;" but a new company having been projected, who applied to parliament for an act of incorporation, meetings were held in December 1845, the result of which was the amalgamation of the two companies in 1846, when an act of parliament intitled "An Act for lighting with gas the Town and Borough of Stockton in the county of Durham," received the royal assent. The provisions of this act extend over the town and borough of Stockton, the parish of Norton, and the town of South Stockton. The gas works are situated opposite the south end of High-street. The gasometers will hold about 24,000 cubic feet of gas, which up to March 1849, was supplied to consumers at 6s. 10d. per 1,000 cubic feet; but, at that date, it was reduced to 5s. 10d.; a reduction of 20 per cent on the rates of charge, to both public and private consumers, was made in the September following. H. F. Laidler, secretary; S. Wade, manager. Water is supplied by "The Stockton, Middlesborough, and Yarm Water Company," whose act was passed in 1851; and by another act passed in 1854 the same company are empowered to supply water to Norton, Coatham, Redcar, &c. The offices of the company are in Dovecote-street.

RAILWAYS.—Stockton possesses three lines of railway communication, viz the Stockton and Darlington, the West Hartlepool Harbour, and the North-Eastern Railways. The Stockton and Darlington line was opened in September 1825; and for some time after its opening, the locomotives were worked by vertical cylinders, and the motion was communicated by an endless chain. The greatest speed attained was about eight miles an hour; and passengers travelled in old stage coaches mounted upon framings of railway-wheels, without springs, and drawn by horses. The goods depôt of the railway is near the end of the stone-bridge across the Tees, and the passenger-station on the opposite side of the river at South Stockton. The North-Eastern Railway, which was opened on the 15th May, 1852, has a station in Bishopton-lane; and the West Hartlepool Harbour Railway, a branch of which crosses the North-road, and skirts the eastern limits of the town towards the river, has a station in the same place.

RIVER, &c.—The river Tees, the source of the prosperity of Stockton, has a course of between eighty and ninety miles from its source in Cumberland to the sea. It is tidal to Worsall, three miles above the town of Yarm, between which place and Stockton Bridge, a distance by the river of about seven miles, it is generally called the upper navigation; the vessels engaged in which have folding masts to allow them to pass the bridge. A middle navigation extends from Stockton Bridge to Cargo Fleet, and a lower navigation from the latter place to the most seaward buoy. We have elsewhere alluded to the sinuosities of the Tees, which were formerly so great below Stockton as seriously to impede the navigation of the river; an extraordinary curve in which between Portrack and Stockton measured upwards of two miles round, though the neck of the enclosed peninsula was only 200 yards across. It had been frequently proposed to cut through this neck of land, and considerable exertions were made for that purpose by William Sleigh, Esq., mayor of Stockton, in 1791. The plan, however, was abandoned at the time, but was resumed in 1802, under the management of gentlemen engaged in, or materially connected with, the trade of the place. The plan adopted was to raise a sufficient capital by subscription shares of £50 each, and to obtain an act to form the subscribers into a corporation or company. A capital of £5,000, which it was presumed would be sufficient, was readily procured; and, on calculations founded on the entries and clearances of vessels at the custom house, it appeared that duties, at the rates afterwards inserted in the bill, would produce £735 per annum, which it was expected would cover the annual expenses, and allow a dividend of ten per cent.

me unforeseen circumstances retarded the progress of the measure, particularly the opposition of Lord Harewood, owner of Mandale mill and granary, the Yorkshire side of the Tees, at the very extremity of the curve formed the then winding course of the Tees; and this opposition was only withdrawn on condition of his receiving £2,000 as compensation when the cut could be made navigable. The bill passed in 1808; the excavation was executed under contracts with different undertakers; and the new channel was opened for vessels September 18th, 1810. The total cost of the cut was 2,163 5s. 4d. The act incorporated the subscribers by the title of "The Tees Navigation Company," and empowered them to lay the following duties on all vessels lading or unlading cargoes in the river:—For every British vessel entering or clearing coastwise, 6d. per ton; every British vessel to or from foreign port, 9d. per ton; except such vessels be laden with Norway timber, then 1s. per ton. From the opening of the cut, to May 1847, the entire amount of dues was £21,247 7s. 11d., or an average of about £1,250 per annum. In 1824, Mr. Henry H. Price, C.E., was employed to examine and survey the Tees' navigation, and made two reports, with plans, sections, soundings, and estimates for making a cut at Newport and other improvements. On the 19th June, 1828, an act, 9 Geo. IV., c. 97, received the royal assent, and by its provisions the Tees Navigation Company were empowered "to make a navigable cut from the east side of the river Tees, near Portrack (Blue House Point), in the county of Durham, into the said river near Newport, in the township and parish of Acklam, in the north riding of the county of York." By section 62, the company were authorised to raise 20,000, at an interest of ten per cent per annum; and by section 63, to raise a share capital £30,000. The new cut, which crosses a large curve in the river to the north, was opened in due form on the 10th February, 1831; and about 1,107 yards long, 16 feet deep, and 250 feet wide. By means of it vessels which could not navigate the old channel are now enabled to sail up to Stockton. Its total cost was £25,995 18s. 5d. From 1829 to 1850, there was expended on the river £65,243 14s., and paid to engineers £3,765 6s. 7d., amounting to a total of £69,009 0s. 7d.

"The cut made in 1810," says a recent writer, "with that of 1831, and the improvements of the river navigation by the erection of parallel works and jetties in Billingham Reach, Bamble's Bight, and Cargo Fleet Reach, shortened, deepened, fixed, and improved the navigable channel between Stockton and the latter place. A steam dredge-boat was employed, and about 4,550 tons of clay were removed from the bed of the river. In 1808, vessels drawing only about eight-and-a-half feet of water at ordinary springs could go up to Stockton; this can now be done by vessels drawing about fifteen-and-a-half feet. The lower jetties were run out by H. H. Price, Esq., C.E.; and more were afterwards placed by W. A. Brooks, Esq., at first resident, and afterwards consulting engineer to the Tees Navigation Company. At Newport, about three miles below Stockton, the river runs east-north-east to Haverton Hill, and is called Billingham Reach. Hence its course changes south, having the drops at Port Clarence on the Durham side, and the newly-formed town and docks of Middlesborough on the Yorkshire side. At the southern extremity of this latter reach, and also on the Yorkshire side is Cargo Fleet, from whence the channel of the river, turning eastward, extends into a wide estuary which is a little contracted at the mouth by a tongue of land projecting from the north, called Seaton Snook. From this point a sand, called the North Gare, stretches to the south and east; and nearly opposite to it is the South Gare, a sort of peninsular shoal from the Bran Sand, which occupies the south side of the harbour mouth. The estuary is nearly five miles long from Cargo fleet to a line drawn from Seaton Snook, on the north side, to Tod Point, on the south; its greatest breadth is three-and-three-quarter miles; and it contains about 8,800 acres. Excepting the central channels, it is nearly all dry at low water; that part of it which lies between the channels and the Durham shore being called the Seal Sand."

The depth of water on the bar, at low spring tides, is about ten or twelve feet; and the rise on the bar, at springs is seventeen feet; at Middlesborough, fourteen feet three inches; and at Stockton, twelve feet. The difference between the time of high water at the bar and at Stockton Quay is one hour. Lights were placed in the river in 1838. There are four towers and one floating light at the entrance; and the channel thence to Middlesborough is lighted by eleven fixed and one floating light. Some of the leading lights are occasionally removed, by persons appointed for the purpose according to the shifting of the bar or shoals. The lights are so judiciously placed that vessels can come in by night as well as by day.

An act of parliament was passed in June 1852, the preamble of which states the capital of the Tees Navigation Company, created under the acts of 1814 and 1828, at £29,000, in 580 shares at £50 each; and the debt on mortgage and otherwise, at £30,320. It is enacted that the commissioners to be appointed under this, "The Tees Conservancy and Stockton Dock Act, 1852, shall become liable to the liabilities of the company. The commissioners are to consist of five persons elected annually on the 9th November by the Stockton council, five by the Middlesborough improvement commissioners (now by the Middlesborough council), and two by the Yarm ratepayers; five to be a quorum. The body of commissioners are to be conservators of the Tees, vested with the property of the Tees Navigation Company. The following are the works which the commissioners are empowered to execute by the provisions of the above-named act of 1852:—"Firstly. To make a cut and channel from the present channel of the Tees, from the river entrance at the Middlesborough Dock to the ninth buoy anchoring pool in the Tees, and to divert by dikes or otherwise through that cut or channel the waters of the Tees. Secondly. To widen the present channel of the Tees on the south bank, from the east end of the Stockton cut next hereinafter described, along the south bank of the Tees near Newport, in the north riding of the county of York. Thirdly. To make a cut or channel from the southern side of the Tees, from a point near the stone bridge at Stockton, across certain lands in the township of Thornaby, in the parish of Stainton, in the north riding of the county of York, and into the present channel of the Tees, at a point opposite or nearly opposite to the island called Jenny Mill's Island, and then diverting through the Stockton cut of the waters of the Tees. Fourthly. To make in the present bed or channel of the Tees, between these two last-mentioned points, and on the road lying south of the present channel of the Tees, between those points of the Stockton cut, a dock or basin for the accommodation of the shipping in the Tees, with or without flood-gates, at the eastern end of the dock or basin, and all necessary wharfs, quays, landing places, warehouses, works, and conveniences. Fifthly. To embank and fill up the south-west corner of the present channel of the Tees, to the distance of 400 feet or thereabouts, at the commencement of the Stockton cut. Sixthly. To make a road, or to appropriate and make public the existing private road leading out of the high road from or near to the west end of the stone bridge over the Tees, and the extending of the same across the principal embankment up to the west side of the Stockton cut at the south end thereof. Seventhly. To appropriate and make public a private road adjoining to or leading from the high road from Stockton to Guisborough, at a point about 180 feet from the east end of that stone bridge, and leading thence to the shipbuilding yard now occupied by Messrs. William Turnbull and Company on the south side of the Stockton cut. Eighthly. To widen, deepen, straighten, dredge, protect, and otherwise improve the bed, channel, and banks of the Tees, as the commissioners may from time to time deem necessary for maintaining and improving the navigation thereof, from High Ford to the outside the bar at the mouth of the Tees. Ninthly. To prevent and remove all obstructions to the navigation of the Tees, and all encroachments therein, and to prevent the erection of piers, quays, jetties, wharfs, and other works on the Tees. Tenthly. To provide, place, maintain, and remove buoys, beacons, moorings, steam-engines, dredges, and other works and machinery, lights, light-ships, and light-houses in or near the entrance of the Tees. Eleventhly. To remove or compel the removal of all wrecks, encroachments, and obstructions, which may in any way prejudice or obstruct the free navigation of the Tees. Twelfthly. To make, amend, repair, maintain, alter, and remove all such works and conveniences whatsoever as the commissioners from time to time may think it proper, for any of the purposes of this act, to make, amend, repair, maintain, alter, and remove; and (subject to the provisions of this act) the commissioners may do all other acts necessary for the conservancy and improvement of the Tees, and the regulation of the navigation thereof; nevertheless doing as little damage as can be, and making full satisfaction (as by this act provided) to all parties interested for all damage by them sustained by reason of the execution by the commissioners of the powers of this act." The shipping places of the Clarence Railway Company are to be protected, and disputes with the company settled by arbitration. The works by the commissioners must be completed within seven years from the commencement of the act. Provision is also made for the maintenance of proper light.

FISHERIES.—The Tees produces abundance of excellent fish, such as flounders, eels, smelts, or sparlings, &c., and the river fishery has for centuries been considered an important pursuit. In shallow parts of the river, at Middleton-one-Row and higher up, there is plenty of trout; but the principal fishery is that of salmon. Otters, however, are very destructive to this latter kind of fish; and several of them have been sometimes seen fighting for a salmon. Shrimps are taken in Tees bay by means of small nets fixed to the end of poles. Cockles are gathered on ridges of sand left dry at ebb-tide near the middle of the stream, and a considerable trade is carried on in mussels, of which there is an extensive bed. The bishops of Durham have had for centuries the royalties of the river.

CUSTOMS, PORT, &c.—The trade of Hartlepool having declined, the chief officers of the customs were removed from that place to Stockton in 1680; and three free quays were appointed by a commission from the Exchequer in 1683. In that document, the port is described as a member of the port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and its limits are stated to be "from the Black Halls, about eight miles from the bar of the Tease, towards the N.N.W., and so into the sea to fourteen fathoms water; and from thence directly, in a supposed line, till it fall opposite to the promontory or point called Huntcliffe-foot about six miles from Tease-bar, towards the E.S.E.; and so directly from the said barr and limitts up the river Tease S.S.W. to the horse-ferry, commonly called Stockton Ferry, saving the usual and known privileges by law belonging to the port of Hartinpoole." A more extensive jurisdiction is assigned in a commission returned into the Court of Exchequer, 3 Geo. II. The customs port of Stockton now extends from the south side of the town of Seaton, the limit of the port of Hartlepool, to Huntcliffe-foot, the boundary of the port of Whitby. The parties who are empowered to levy dues within the port are—The Tees Conservancy Commissioners, the municipal corporation of Stockton, the Trinity House of Newcastle, the trustees of Ramsgate Harbour, the warden and assistants of Dover, Bridlington Harbour Trustees, and the Russia Company.* There are twenty-two private quays in Stockton harbour, and four public quays. There are also seven coal staiths. The Custom House business is transacted in the Borough Hall, High-street; John Shelly, collector.

SHIPPING.—In 1635, when the tax of ship-money was levied, Stockton, Hartlepool, and Sunderland, were charged with providing one ship of 200 tons for the service of the state, manned with eighty men and double equipage, &c. at an expense of £1,850, levied on the whole county. The shipping of the port was for some time unimportant; but, on the revival of the town from its depression in the seventeenth century, the number of ships began to increase, and has since continued steadily to advance. The number of vessels belonging to this port in January 1795, was 47; tonnage, 5,730. In September 1821, there were 66 vessels; tonnage, 6,880. In January 1827, there were 57 vessels, measuring upwards of 5,465 tons; in 1828, 79 vessels, measuring 6,520 tons; and in 1829, 74 vessels, measuring 7,206 tons. In January 1832, the number had increased to 80 vessels, measuring 7,970 tons; and in 1850, there were 182 vessels, measuring 27,348 tons. At the close of the year 1854, there were 158 vessels, measuring 28,603 tons. The first Steam-boat entered the Tees in 1822; in 1824, one was built for the use of the port; and in 1844, there were seven belonging to the Tees. In 1854, there were twenty-six registered steam vessels, of from ten to fifty-three tons burden.

COMMERCE.—As a commercial station, Stockton occupies a favourable position for carrying on trade with continental ports, and only requires accommodation for shipping to gain its full proportion in the advantages of such a trade. The chief imports are timber, with deals, &c., iron, hemp, flax, tallow, hides, linseed, &c., besides groceries and colonial produce coastwise. The exports are coal, coke, iron in its various forms, agricultural produce, linen, &c. The receipts of the customs at Stockton varied, during the last century, between £3,819 8s. 3½d. in 1723, and £8,019 7s. 5½d. in 1798. In 1800, the amount was £7,723 14s. 4½d.; in 1816, £5,866 7s. 0½d; but in the following year, it advanced to £10,483 1s. 6½d. In 1831, the duties amounted to £43,994 17s.; and since that period, the impulse given to the trade of the port has materially tended to increase those receipts, which, in 1850, were stated to be £83,253. A Chamber of Commerce has been established here, since 1850. Its business is conducted by a president, a vice-president, a treasurer, a committee of five persons, and two secretaries.

THE BOROUGH, CORPORATION, &c.—The borough of Stockton comprises

* The Russia Company was established in the reign of Philip and Mary, by letters patent, granted to "certain merchant adventurers for the discovery of lands unknown," and confirmed by act of parliament in the reign of Elizabeth. They are empowered to levy dues in every port in England.

ly a small portion of the town, by which it is entirely surrounded. "It extends," according to Fordyce, "from Dovecote-street, on the north, to near the south end of High-street, Park Row, &c.; and from the river, on the east, to West Row, on the west. In 1851, it contained 342 inhabited houses and 5 uninhabited; the population consisted of 888 males and 979 females, or 1,867 in all. The jurisdiction of the town consisted of two parts; one, exclusively that of the borough, and the other of that part beyond its boundary; constables and surveyors of highways being separately appointed for each district. There are seventy-two borough rights, each consisting of a certain portion of ground, with the buildings thereon, and laid down on the old plan reserved among the corporation records. The number of the holders of these rights is continually varying; the burgages are not all of equal size, many of them having been subdivided; but only one vote in the corporation can be given for each original portion, and this right is exercised in turns, annually, by each owner; except in some instances, where, at the division, the borough right has been reserved to some particular property." By the provisions of an act of parliament, intitled "The Stockton Extension and Improvement Act," passed in 1852, the boundaries of the borough have been altered and made co-extensive with the township; and within these limits is divided into four wards, each of which returns six councillors. By the same act, the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, have power to levy rates, penalties, or other moneys: to supply gas and water to the town, for which purpose they may lease the works of the existing companies; to improve the streets, lanes, and roads; to regulate fairs and markets; and to appoint constables for that purpose. Stockton was formerly governed by a mayor, recorder, and aldermen; but the office of recorder is now abolished. The mayor was elected, on the first Tuesday after the 29th September, by a majority of the burgages or owners of houses; but since the passing of the town extension act in 1852, the franchise is vested in the electors entitled to it under the Municipal Corporation's Act, 5 and 6 William IV., c. 76. The town council now consists of a mayor, eight aldermen, and twenty-four councillors; six of the latter being elected from each of the four wards described in the act, in the same manner as directed by the Municipal Corporation's Act. The corporation is constituted the local Board of Health, with all the powers of the Public Health Act. The revenue of the corporation is derived from the rents of houses and the stallage of the shambles and Market Place, which are all freehold, and from the income of other property held by leases under the Bishop of Durham, and the anchorage and plankage dues.

The magistrates, a list of whom, with the members of the corporation, will be found at the end of the volume, hold their sittings in the Borough Hall, in which also is the police station. The county court is held monthly in the same place. Judge, Henry Stapylton, Esq.; clerk, John Edwin Marshall, Esq.; assistant clerk, T. Crosby; high bailiff, George Taylor; assistant bailiff, Robert Hunter. The present steward of the bishop's court in Stockton is Mr. Joseph R. Wilson.

THE STOCKTON POOR-LAW UNION comprises an area of 83,774 acres, and its population in 1851 was 44,433. It is divided into the sub-districts of Stockton, Yarm, and Hartlepool. The Stockton sub-district contains the parishes of Stockton and Norton, in the county of Durham; and the township of Thornaby, in the parish of Stainton, Yorkshire. The Yarm sub-district comprises the parishes of Long Newton, Elton, part of Redmarshall (the townships of Redmarshall and Carlton), Grindon, and Egglescliffe, in the county of Durham; and, in the north riding of Yorkshire, the chapel of High Worsall, in Northallerton parish; the parish of Kirk Levington, consisting of the townships of Low Worsall, Kirk Levington, Castle Levington, and Pickton; the parish of Yarm; the townships of Stainton, Malby, and Ingleby Barwick, in the parish of Stainton; the parish of West Acklam; and the parish of Middlesborough, comprising the township of that name and Linthorp. The Hartlepool sub-district contains the parishes of Billingham (including Wolviston), Greatham, Stranton, Hart, and Elwick Hall, and the chapelry of Hartlepool. In the year ending Lady Day, 1854, the poor-rate received in Stockton amounted to £3,499 18s.; and the total amount expended for the relief of the poor, was £2,698 13s. The Union Workhouse is in Portrack Lane, and was erected in 1851; it will accommodate 260 persons. George Pearson, governor; Margaret Pearson, matron; Mr. Whiteside, surgeon; Jane E. Wilson, schoolmistress; William Best, clerk; Edward Spence, Richard Langdale, and William Banks, relieving officers.

CHARITIES.—Alms Houses.—According to a license granted by Bishop Crewe, the alms houses "for the convenient lodging of poor impotent persons belonging to the township of Stockton," appears to have been erected about the year 1682. The principal contributors were Margaret Bailey, John Stope, Matthew Wiggoner, and James Cook. The latter of whom, on December 29th, 1702, bequeathed £100, to be paid to the mayor, vicar, and overseer of the poor, to be placed out at interest at five per cent., or laid out in the purchase of lands or tenements, the yearly produce to be by them distributed amongst the needy and poor people that shall dwell in the alms-houses; but in case this interest or income was not paid, it was to revert to his son and daughter, John Cook and Lucy Dalston, whom he appointed his executors. By indenture, November 27th, 1782, it was stated that the said John Cook, who alone had administered to the will, had died insolvent but though Mrs. Dalston was advised that she was not liable to the said legacy or any part thereof, she agreed to pay £50 for the purposes directed in the will. This donation was applied as a part of a sum of £200 payable to Ralph Bunting out of the leasehold premises belonging to the charity school; but no interest has been paid upon it for years, nor is it known whether the principal was ever paid off. By will, dated February 16th, 1811, George Brown, Esq., bequeathed to trustees £3,000 to be applied in rebuilding the alms houses. With this sum a new building was erected on the same site on the east side of High street, in 1816, from a plan by Wyatt. It consists of a centre and wings, 120 feet in length, built of brick, with stone dressings. On the right of the spacious entrance is the committee room, in which also the business of the Stockton Savings Bank is transacted; and on the left are commodious apartments appropriated to the dispensary. The upper floor is approached by a covered gallery; and the entire number of apartments in the building for the residence of poor widows and families, is thirty-six. The alms people are appointed by the vestry.

Bunting's Charity.—Elizabeth Bunting, by will, July 14th, 1743, gave £800 to the vicar and churchwardens of Stockton, for the poor of the parish, not receiving parochial relief. Her personal estate not being sufficient for the payment of her debts, George Hartley and Ann his wife, desirous to perpetuate this charitable donation, invested a like sum, on the 28th February, 1772, in the purchase of £878 13s. 6d. Three-per-cent Consols in the names of trustees. The dividends amounting to £11 7s. per annum are transmitted to the vicar, who distributes the amount amongst poor persons of Stockton, in sums varying from 10s. to 20s., and in some cases to 40s.

Jenkin's Charity.—Major John Jenkins bequeathed, in 1661, 52s. per annum to the poor of Stockton, 12d. to be paid every Sunday in white bread. This sum is paid to the churchwardens by the owners of certain lands in the parish, and twelve penny loaves are provided every Sunday, which are given to poor widows who attend divine service.

Snowdon's Charity.—John Snowdon, in 1781, bequeathed £100 Three-per-cent Stock for the benefit of four decayed housekeepers of Stockton, whom he named to have the preference.

Sutton's Charity.—George Sutton, April 4th, 1815, bequeathed to trustees 500 Three-per-Cent Consols, the dividends to be paid to the treasurer of the Female Benefit Club in Stockton, whereof his late wife and Mrs. Ann Sleight were the original patronesses. Also £100 like stock, the dividends to be paid half-yearly, so that the same should accumulate for twenty years, after which time the dividends of the whole should be paid to the treasurer for the benefit of the other Female Benefit Club in Stockton. He further directed that his executors should set apart £200 like stock, for each of the two benefit clubs of men in Stockton which should be subsisting at the time of his death, the dividends to be paid to the treasurers of such clubs for the same being, under certain specified regulations; and that in case the said clubs of men or women should be discontinued, the stock which would have been appropriated to their benefit should be transferred to the trustees of the Blue Coat School, for the purposes of that charity. In respect of the £500 left for the female benefit club first mentioned, £15 per annum is paid to its treasurer. The yearly sum of £3, in respect of the legacy of £100, was invested from time to time as directed, and the dividends of the whole are applied in assisting the income of the other female benefit club. Two of the requests of men's clubs have fallen to the school, and the dividends in respect of the residue, £600 stock, are divided equally, and paid over to the treasurers of three male benefit societies still existing. Mr. Sutton also bequeathed to the late Mrs. Sutton's Blanket Fund the interest of £200 Five-per-Cent Consols; to the Dispensary, while that establishment shall continue, the interest of £300 Three-per-Cent Consols; to the Sunday-schools, the interest of £100 do.; to the School of Industry, the interest of £300 do.; as an addition to the stipend of the church organist (interest to accumulate for twenty years), £400 do.; towards enclosing a burial ground, if purchased within six years from the testator's death, £600 do.; towards paving, lighting, and improving the town, if an act of parliament should be procured within five years after his death, £200; and to the Bible Society, £100.

EMINENT MEN.—Christopher Allison, a native of Stockton, was a brave and skilful seaman, who contributed materially to the capture of the Michault privateer, of fourteen-nine-pounders and 182 men, on New Year's Day, 1758, in Dungeness-road, at which time he was master of the Adventure armed ship, commanded by Captain Bray. He died at Stockton on the 11th July, 1808, aged eighty-seven years.

Admiral Sir Thomas Bertie, K.S., was born at Stockton July 3rd, 1758; and entered the naval service in 1773, on board the Seahorse, he first met, and became the messmate of Nelson and Trowbridge, with whom he formed an intimate acquaintance which lasted through life. He rapidly rose in his profession; and at the battle of Copenhagen particularly distinguished himself, for which he received the thanks of Nelson. He became rear-admiral in 1804; but was compelled, by ill-health and an impaired constitution, to strike his flag in February 1810. He afterwards passed through the successive gradations of rank, and, in May 1823, attained the honour of admiral. He died in June of the same year, in the sixty-seventh year of his age.

Vice-admiral Nathan Brunton was born at Stockton in 1744, and entered the navy in 1771, as an able-seaman on board the Marlborough. He became lieutenant in 1777, and rose successively from rank to rank. In November 1805, when he was made rear-admiral of the blue. He became vice-admiral of the blue in July 1810; and, in June 1814, vice-admiral of the white. He died at Stockton on the 19th November, 1814, at seventy years.

John Chipchase, a distinguished teacher of mathematics, and a pupil of Emerson, was a native of this town, where, for half a century, he was engaged in the education of youth for maritime pursuits. He died on May 13th, 1810, at the advanced age of seventy.

Brass Crosby, Esq., the patriotic alderman of London, was born at Stockton May 8th, 1725. After being placed with a respectable solicitor at Stockton, he removed to London, where he pursued his profession with industry and integrity. In 1764 he served the office of sheriff: in 1765 was elected alderman of Bread-street ward; and, in 1770, attained the honour of the city, in which capacity, having pursued the same independent course as his predecessors, Beckford and Trecothick, he was committed to the Tower by the house of commons (of which he was a member) for liberating a printer of the debates in parliament, who had been arrested by a messenger of the house, in the city of London, without the authority of a city magistrate. This event involved the question of publishing the debates in both houses, which, previous to this time, had been inserted in the public prints under the titles of the debates in Lilliput, of the Robin Hood society, &c. and the speakers were designated under fictitious names. On the termination of the session of parliament, he left the Tower, accompanied by alderman Oliver (committed under similar circumstances), under a discharge of twenty-one guns belonging to the artillery company, and was escorted to the Mansion House with fifty-three carriages. At night the city was illuminated. On the conclusion of his mayoralty, he received the thanks of the corporation and a silver cup of £200 value, which still remains in the possession of his family. He died on February 14th, 1793, in Chatham Place, and was buried with considerable pomp in Chelsfield Church.

Joseph Ritson, one of the worthies of Stockton, was born October 2nd, 1722. He was bred to the law, but a passion for ancient English poetry, rhyme, and ballad, induced him to become an indefatigable collector, in his way. At a period Ritson possessed a competent property, but, having ventured to speculate with nearly his whole fortune in the funds, the revulsion consequent on the peace of Amiens, swept away most of his capital. Under these circumstances he sold a portion of his valuable library by auction, and the remainder was reluctantly disposed of by his nephew at Leigh and Sotheby's, in December 1803. He had a considerable turn for topography, and assisted both Brewster and Hutchinson in their respective histories. Many of Ritson's works (some of which were printed at Newcastle) have become extremely rare. He died in a deplorable state of mental derangement on the 23rd September, 1803, at the fifty-second year of his age.

Lieutenant-Colonel William Sleigh was a native of Stockton. In early life entered the 19th regiment of foot, becoming lieutenant in 1760, and captain in 1780. He served with his regiment in the American was present at two actions. In 1790, he became captain in the 23rd regiment, and lieutenant-colonel of the 83rd in 1794. On retiring from the army, he accepted the commission of major in the Durham militia, and subsequently was appointed inspecting-colonel of volunteer corps in the district of the West Riding, in Manchester, and in Wales. His last service was commander of the volunteer cavalry in his native district; and in all these services he acquitted himself as an experienced and judicious officer. He died at Stockton, at the age of sixty-six, on the 18th February, 1825.

EASINGTON WARD.

Easington Ward occupies the central part of the eastern side of the county of Durham, and is nearly oblong in form, one of its sides, which extends from the parish of Hart to the mouth of the Wear, being about fifteen miles in length from south to north, and bounded by the German Ocean. The average width of the ward from east to west is from seven to eight miles. It is bounded on the north by Chester Ward, from which it is separated by the Wear, and on the west partly by the windings of the Wear, and partly by the parish of Pitlington. The southern boundary is formed by an imaginary line, proceeding from the sea through the parish of Hart, and which passes the extreme verge of Trimdon chapelry. Its western boundary is marked by the chapelry of Croxdale and the lands of Sherburn Hospital. The general appearance of the country in this ward is hilly, but without any remarkable elevations. The soil is not so fertile as that of Stockton Ward and the eastern portion of Darlington Ward; and, except the Wear, on its verge, there are no streams of any magnitude. "But it is below the soil," says a recent author, "that the great wealth of this important ward is found. Nearly its whole extent is one immense bed of the best household coal; and its surface is characterised by the numberless steam-engines and other apparatus by which the mines are drained, their produce exhumed, and their wealth conveyed for use or shipment. The southern boundary of the coalfield passes across the ward from Hartlepool docks and railway through Monk Hesleden, near Castle Eden Pit, and to the south of Hutton Henry. Limestone is also extensively quarried and burnt in many places, and is another valuable natural production of the ward. Public and private railways meet and intersect each other in various directions; and the district may be considered as one great mining and manufacturing laboratory. Though containing a large population, Easington Ward possesses only one market town—Sunderland. Villages, large enough for market towns, however, form the central points of populous colliery districts; and the facilities of modern transit afford an easy communication with the markets of Durham, Sedgefield, Darlington, Stockton, and Hartlepool." Formerly, this ward contained, in whole or in part, fifteen parishes, and four extra-parochial places; but the parishes of Pitlington, St Giles, St. Mary-le-Bow, St. Mary-the-Less, and St. Nicholas, the Castle Precincts, and the College, in the city of Durham, with the extra-parochial places Sherburn Hospital and Whitwell House, the townships of Coxhoe, Quarrington and Cassop, in Kelloe parish, and the townships of Moorsley and Moorhouse, in Haughton-le-Spring parish, were severed from it under the powers of the act of 6 George IV., c. 43, and annexed to Durham Ward. Easington deanery is, however, co-extensive with the ward as it existed previous to these alterations, and includes the parishes, parochial places, and townships annexed to Durham Ward on the west; whilst the parish of Monkwearmouth and its dependant chapelries, though annexed to Sunderland for parliamentary and municipal purposes, remain incorporated with Chester deanery.

SOUTH DIVISION.

This division of Easington Ward comprises the parishes of Castle Eden, Easington, Kelloe (part of), Monk Hesleden, and the chapelries of Thornley, Trimdon, and Wingate Grange.

CASTLE EDEN PARISH.

This parish, which comprises no dependant townships, is bounded on the north by Easington parish, on the west by the chapelry of Wingate (formed of portions of the parishes of Castle Eden and Kelloe), and on the south and east by Monk Hesledon. It comprises an area of 1,935 acres, and its annual value is £4,518. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 362; in 1811, 257; in 1821, 281; in 1831, 260; in 1841, 558; and in 1851, 491. The Hartlepool branch of the North Eastern Railway extends into this parish, and has a station near the village. Eden is twice mentioned, under the name Joden or Yoden, before the conquest; and after that period, it became the lordship of Robert de Brus, who granted the chapel to the monks of St. Cuthbert, with all tithes and parochial dues, upon condition that within four years the prior of St. Cuthbert should build a chapel within the vill, and provide for its consecration. This is supposed to be the origin of the parish church of Eden; and that a castle, or manorial residence, supplied the addition to the name. About the year 1150, William de Sancta Barbara, Bishop of Durham, demised half of the tithes of Castle Eden to Guisborough priory, and the manorial rights were bestowed upon that institution by Ivo, son of Adam Seton. By virtue of these grants, the prior and convent of Guisborough possessed this parish till the dissolution, after which Henry VIII., in 1535, presented to the church here as to a vicarage; but the church and manor were subsequently granted out by the crown, and afterwards purchased from Mr. Bromley, of Warwickshire, by Rowland Burdon, Esq., in whose family they still remain.

The Village of Castle Eden is situated two-and-a-half miles from the sea, a little off the main road from Stockton to Sunderland, about fifteen miles north off the former, and twelve miles south of the latter place. It consists of about seventeen cottages, with flower gardens in front.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St. James, is situated north of the village, and was erected in 1764, by Rowland Burdon, Esq. It is a neat and commodious structure, capable of accommodating about 450 persons; and has been enlarged, and otherwise improved at various periods. The spire contains a clock, and forms a pleasing object in the surrounding scenery. The font, an oval basin of marble, with a bible, by Baskerville, two folio prayer books, a silver chalice and paten, were all the gifts of the patrons. The living, formerly a curacy, but now a rectory, is in the patronage of Rowland Burdon, Esq., and incumbency of the Rev. Henry B. Tristram, M.A.

Castle Eden House, the seat and property of Rowland Burdon, Esq., is a noble mansion, pleasantly situated in a spacious park to the north east of the church. Its exterior is plain; but the dimensions and arrangement of the interior are chaste and elegant, while the surrounding plantations and pleasure grounds are extensive, and the magnificent conservatory, erected about two years ago, is constructed after the most approved models. Great improvements have been effected here of late years, and Castle Eden Dene has been rendered one of the most romantic spots in the north of England. A recent writer speaking of the dene, says, "A winding and safe road, throughout the whole extent of the defile, serves admirably the purpose of displaying its endless beauties to the many hundred visitors, who, during the summer, are admitted by the liberal proprietor to the enjoyments of this magnificent region, containing some of the finest scenery in the county of Durham. Seen from the upper part of the dene, not far from where a stream of water springs from the crevice of a rock, and, forming a natural cascade, falls into the Gunner's pool, the road can be traced to a considerable distance through the valley below. Snake-like, and in broad coils it rushes down the deep sides towards the bottom of the dell, which is too much steeped in gloom to reveal its own secrets. Here and there the road is seen for a moment to right itself upon a level in the shape of a platform, or to wind round a steep bank covered with rushwood; but it soon again takes a downward course, and proceeds to its destination, caves gloomy and unfathomable; masses of rock, detached and rolled down precipices—among which a stream of water frets and murmurs—and trees of every species that place themselves in the soil of Great Britain—such are some of the features that strike the attention of the visitor, who, in general prefers approaching the dene, and exploring it, from the lowest sea shore entrance."

Castle Eden Colliery is about a mile distant from the village of Castle Eden. It is very extensive and affords employment to a considerable number of persons; the coal is shipped at Hartlepool. Mr. John A. Forster, viewer and manager. (See also Monk Hesleden parish).

Factory is a village in this parish, about half a mile south of Castle Eden, and is so called from an extensive cotton mill which was formerly carried on here. It contains a large and commodious inn, called the Castle Eden Inn, in which petty sessions for the south division of Easington Ward are held every month, before one or more of the following magistrates, viz.:—Rowland Burdon, Esq., J. A. Park, Esq., and the Rev. Henry G. Liddell. A school for boys is supported here by Mr. Burdon; and one for girls by Mrs. Burdon, and the quarterly payments of the children. There is also a literary and reading society, which is well supported. Here is a station on the North-Eastern Railway, at which trains stop several times daily.

EASINGTON PARISH.

The parish of Easington is bounded on the north by Dalton-le-Dale, on the north-west by Houghton-le-Spring, on the west by the chapelry of Shadforth and the parish of Pitlington, on the south-west by Thornley chapelry, on the south and south-east by Castle Eden and Monk Hesleden, and on the east by the sea. It comprises the townships of Easington, Haswell, Hawthorn, and Shotton.

EASINGTON township contains 5,217 acres, and its annual value is £5,042. The population in 1801 was 487; in 1811, 542; in 1821, 593; in 1831, 698; in 1841, 812; and in 1851, 916 souls. The manor of Easington is first mentioned in a grant to Ealfrid, the son of Britulfine, by Bishop Cutheard. "Essington," says Lambard, "a manor perreyninge of ancient tyme to the byshopryke of Durham; for, when one Nicholas resigned in tyme of Henry III., he had this towne, Howden, and Stocton, appointed for his sustentation duringe his life." Easington is mentioned jointly with Tharpe in Boldon Book. There were thirty-one villains, who held their lands and performed their services, like those of Boldon. By that record it appears there were only two free tenants, who held each half a caracate of land, and served on the bishop's embassies. The carpenter, smith, and punder, each held lands for their services; and the two villis rendered 30s. cornage, and provided two milch cows. The demesne was let out, but the pasture and sheep stock were in the hands of the bishop. In Hatfield's Survey, the demesne is said to consist of 300 acres of land, which were leased at a gross rent of 18d. Nine free tenants are named in that record; and twenty-nine bond tenants; each held two oxgangs of fifteen acres. Six persons from Easington joined the northern rebellion in 1569, two of whom were afterwards executed. The manorial property has always been vested in the see of Durham, under which a great portion of the lands are still held by copy of court roll. Between the years 1656 and 1665, the moors of the parish were enclosed, and divided amongst the freeholders, copyholders, and leaseholders. The present landowners are Christopher Mordue, Esq., Matthew Woodfield, Esq., John Leighton, Esq., the Marchioness of Londonderry, Hodgson Hindle, Esq., George Pearson, Esq., Rev. Henry George Liddell, Esq., Benjamin M. Stafford, Esq., Henry Longstaffe, Esq., Mr. John Harding, Messrs. John and Richard Cooper, Messrs. Jordison and Clarke, Mr. Thomas Jackson, and others. The remains of an ancient road, bearing the name of Salter's Way, passes through this parish, as well as along the greater part of the eastern coast of the county of Durham. The Hett Basaltic Dyke traverses the Durham coal-field, in a west-south-west direction from the sea in this township. It passes between Shotton and Haswell Collieries, and those of Thornley and Ludworth; passing Hett, it continues between Ferryhill and Sunderland Bridge, close by the north end of the village of Tudhoe, across the Wear, and a little to the north of Willington Colliery, apparently running into the Butterknowle slip dyke.

The Village of Easington, which gives name to the ward and deanery, is situated on the turnpike road between Stockton and Sunderland, seventeen miles north of the former, and ten south of the latter place. It stands on elevated ground, which gradually slopes towards the sea, and its church tower affords a good landmark to sailors in the neighbourhood of the coast.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary, consists of aisle, nave, chancel, and square western tower, the latter is in the Norman style, and the other portions of the church are in the early English and decorated styles. The tower, which is about sixty feet high, is supported by a circular arch, concealed by a modern flat ceiling, and a strong exterior buttress on the south-west. The entrance the church is on the south side of the tower, the original south door of the nave having been built up. Several fragments of old armour are preserved in the tower. The nave is fifty-seven feet long and twenty-two wide; and the aisles, which are of equal length with the nave, are eleven feet wide. The chancel, which was entirely rebuilt and restored, with the exception of the north wall, in 1853, is forty-one feet in length by twenty-one in breadth; and containing a fine eastern window of five lights, filled with stained glass, representing the Annunciation, Baptism, Crucifixion, Resurrection, and Christ appearing to the three Marias. The other windows in the chancel are also filled with stained glass. Within the communion rails are two recumbent figures, supposed to represent some members of the Conyers family, of Horden. There is a neat marble tablet on the north wall, erected to the memory of the youngest daughter of the present rector. The beautiful decorated screen, which formerly separated the nave and chancel, has been removed, so that an uninterrupted view of the entire edifice may now be obtained. This screen, which is carefully preserved, is of about the year 1660, as are also the carved bench ends with which the body of the church is completely fitted. A portion of those in the south aisle are called the Pesspool Seats. The roof of the nave is an open arch of stained oak; and the clerestory, which had been locked up by the plastered ceiling, is now opened out. In 1855, the interior of the church was thoroughly cleaned and painted. The chancel was rebuilt at the expense of the rector, and the restorations and repairs of the other portions of the edifice were defrayed partly at the expense of the parish and partly by the rector. There were formerly two chantries in this church, viz. St. Mary's, valued at £4 11s. 4d., and Our Lady of Pittie's, valued at £5. The parish register commences in 1571. The living is a rectory, valued in the Liber Regis at £100; gross income, £1,437. The tithes were commuted in 1837. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, the Venerable Henry George Liddell, M.A., for whom the Rev. William Liddell officiates as curate.

The Rectory House, which stands a little to the north of the church, shaded by a grove of sycamores, was erected at the same time as the nave of the church; but has been much improved by the present rector.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here.

The Parochial School, for children of both sexes, is a commodious stone building, near the church, erected by subscription in 1814, and has an average attendance of about 120 pupils. Archdeacon Prosser gave £1,000 towards the support of this school, which was invested in the Three-per-cents, and produces upwards of £33 per annum; to which sum the trustees of Lord Frewe's Charity give £10 a year, and the remaining expenses are made up by contributions from the rector, and the payments of the children. John Dote, teacher.

Charities.—In 1771, Richard Wardell gave £100 to the poor of this parish; and about seventy years ago, a close in Hawthorn, the rents of which were given to the poor, was sold for £100. These two sums are secured, with interest at five per cent, on mortgage of the tolls of the turnpike road between Newcastle and Monkwearmouth, and the interest is distributed in the church on Candlemas-day and St. Thomas'-day, amongst the poor, by the parish officers, in sums of about 2s. 6d. each. See also the other townships of the parish.

The Easington Poor Law Union comprises an area of 38,943 acres, and its population in 1851 was 21,795 souls. It includes the parishes of Castle Eden, Dalton-le-Dale, Easington, Monk Hesleden, and Seaham; the townships of Kelloc, Thornley, and Wingate, in the parish of Kelloc; the township of Nesbitt, in the parish of Hart; and the township of Burdon, in the parish of Bishopwearmouth. The receipts of the union for the year ending Lady-day, 1855, amounted to £4,597 3s., and the expenditure was £4,422 15s. The Union Workhouse, situated to the east of the village, is a good stone building, in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1850, at a cost of about £2,500 by Messrs. Bulmer and Brown, builders, of Easington, from designs furnished by Messrs. J. and B. Green, of Newcastle. There are four classifications in the establishment, which at present (1855) contains thirty-one inmates: Governor and relieving officer, John Mason; matron, Mary Mason; surgeon, Samuel Broadbent; clerk, John Dote.

Horden Hall, situated about a mile from Easington, is one of the few remaining specimens of old domestic architecture remaining in the county. Its exterior appearance is somewhat plain, consisting of gables to the east and west, with a projecting porch to the south. Above is a bay-window with plain mullions. A shield of arms above the entrance appears to fix the date of the building about the time of Christopher Conyers, in the age of Queen Elizabeth or James I. The staircase is of oak, and the balustrade is rough but spiritedly carved with foliage and figures. The drawing room is paneled and contains a carved oaken chimney-piece, bearing some grotesque busts and a profusion of tracery and foliage in relief. The arms of Claxton and Conyers occupy the centre of two compartments. After the accession of Henry VIII. Bishop Flambard gave Horden, Ravensworth, Blakiston, and Hetton to his nephew, Richard, from whose descendant, Marmaduke, the family assumed the name of Fitz-Marmaduke. From the Fitz-Marmadukes, Horden passed to Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, who granted it to Sir Thomas Holland, by whom it was leased to the De Menvilles. It was afterwards transferred by marriage to the Latons, and subsequently, in a similar manner, to the Claxtons and Conyers.

HASWELL township comprises 8,108 acres, and its annual value is 8,689 4s. 7d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 93; in 1811, 114; in 1821, 115; in 1831, 263; in 1841, in consequence of the opening out of new coal mines, it had increased to 3,981; and, in 1851, it had attained to 3,556 souls. The Hartlepool, and the Durham and Sunderland Railways, extend into this township. Haswell was anciently held by a family bearing the local name. In 1338, Talbot de Northallerton granted a rent-charge out of the lands of Great Haswell to John, son of Adam de Menville and Agnes his wife, and their heirs. From the De Menvilles this estate passed to the Claxtons, and, with Pesspool, Boysfield, and half the manor of Fishburn, was allotted to Felice, youngest daughter of Sir William Claxton, who became the wife of Sir Ralph De Widdrington. In the reign of Elizabeth, Great Haswell was held by the Bellasis family, from whom it was purchased by John Duck, alderman of Durham, whose lady, in 1695, devised it to Thomas Nicholson, Esq., of West Rainton; and, upon his demise, in 1727, it became the property of his three daughters and co-heiresses. The principal landowners at present are John H. B. Baker, Esq., and Mrs. Pemberton.

High Haswell, about three miles from Easington, contains three farm-houses and a few cottages. Low Haswell is about a quarter of a mile to the north-west, and consists of a farm-house. Haswell Lane is a considerable village, consisting of a long line of houses, shops, and public-houses; and adjacent is the junction station of the Durham and Sunderland, and Sunderland and Hartlepool Railways, where trains stop three times each way daily. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have convenient chapels here.

There is also a village school. Haswell Colliery village consists exclusively of pitmen's houses; the colliery school is supported by the coal company, and is attended by ninety boys and sixty girls. James Dand and Ann Reid teachers. Haswell Colliery is very extensive, and affords employment to several hundred men and boys. The five-quarter seam of coal, three feet six inches thick, is at the depth of ninety fathoms from the surface; thirty fathoms lower is the main coal; sixteen fathoms lower, the low main, three feet seven inches thick; and twenty fathoms beneath it, the Hutton seam, four feet four inches; being a total depth of 150 fathoms. The coals are shipped at Sunderland, Seaham, and the Victoria Dock at Hartlepool. One of the most fatal cases of explosion on record in the north of England occurred in the "Little Pit" in this colliery, on the afternoon of Saturday, September 28th, 1844, when no fewer than ninety-five lives were lost, either by the explosion itself, or by the "after-damp." Mr. John Taylor, viewer.

South Hetton is a large colliery village in this township, where there is an extensive colliery, worked by the South Hetton Coal Company, who employ upwards of 1,000 workmen. The five-quarter seam is not at this depth under the limestone, and lower red sandstone; but the main coal is of good quality and thickness at 140 fathoms. The depth of the Hutton seam is 120 fathoms, where it exists in great perfection. The coals are shipped at Sunderland, Seaham Harbour, and the Victoria Dock, Hartlepool. Here is a Church or Chapel of Ease, a neat stone building, in the Gothic style, and capable of accommodating 400 persons. It is in the patronage of the Rectory of Easington, and incumbency of the Rev. Henry Langton. There is also a Wesleyan Chapel, which was erected in 1836. The Colliery School was erected in 1840, by the proprietors of South Hetton Colliery, by whom also it is supported. The average attendance is eighty boys and seventy girls. William Fleck and Dorothy Greenwell, teachers. South Hetton Literary and Reading Society was established in 1848, and now possesses a library of 700 volumes in the various departments of literature. The number of members is about seventy. Thomas William Dugdale, secretary and treasurer.

HAWTHORN township comprises an area of 1,552 acres, and the value of property assessed to the county-rate, in 1858, was £1,291. The population in 1801 was 114; in 1811, 118; in 1821, 140; in 1831, 162; in 1841, 177; and in 1851, 183 souls. This township appears to have been granted by Bishop Flambard to William, son of Ranulf; and Bishop Pudsey confirmed the donation to Thomas, son of William. The family afterwards assumed the name of Herrington. The Merleys, Lumleys, and other families held lands here at an early period; and, subsequently, the Menvilles, Claxtons, and Radclyffes successively held the manor. The manorial rights now belong to Lord and Lady Deerhurst. The landowners at present are the Hon. H. A. Coventry, the South Hetton Coal Company, the trustees of the late James Freeman, Esq., Joseph Parkin, Esq., Richard Pemberton, Esq., Thomas Ogden, Esq., John Warning, Esq., Mr. Thomas Henderson, Mr. John Henderson, Mr. Thomas Snowdon, and several others. "Hawthorne Dene," says a recent topographer, "is one of those deep ravines which descend to the eastern coast of the county of Durham. Near its embouchure, Admiral M<sup>r</sup> bank built a summer retreat, which he called Sailors' Hall, now partly in ruins, and belonging to Mr. Mark Snowdon. When the estate was purchased by Major Anderson, of Newcastle, he erected an elegant Gothic mansion near the same site, designating it Hawthorne Hire Cottage, which now belongs to his representatives. It commands an imposing view of the wild and rocky coast, which here consists of rude cliffs, broken by the action of the sea in deep caverns; whilst the offing is also nearly filled with dangerous rocks and shoals, over which the waves break furiously during storms from the east and north-east. At a little distance, there is a fine bay, called Hawthorne Hire or Hythe, formed by a natural rocky projection, called the Skaw, and off which the light colliers of Sunderland frequently await the flow of the tide in fair weather."

The Village of Hawthorn is pleasantly situated upon an eminence about half a mile north of Easington.

Hawthorn School.—By an instrument, dated November 24th, 1736, Robert Forster directed that £200 should be put at interest by the Durham meeting of the Society of Friends, and paid to a schoolmaster or mistress at Hawthorn, for teaching twenty-four poor children. In respect of this charity the sum of £255 in the new four-per-cents now stands in the name of trustees producing an annual dividend of £10 4s. A school and dwelling-house, with a small garden, were given by the above Robert Forster, and are kept in repair by the Society of Friends. The sum of £10 a-year is paid to a schoolmistress, for which she teaches fourteen children reading, writing, and accounts, and the girls needle-work in addition.

SHOTTON township, the principal proprietors of which are Cotsford Burdett Esq., Cuthbert Ellison, Esq., John Gregson, Esq., Henry Bell, Esq., Cuthbert Thompson, Esq., the executors of the late Anthony Wilkinson, Esq., the Haswell and Shotton Coal Companies, and others, contains 3,853 acres, and its annual value is £4,450. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 2511; in 1811, 286; in 1821, 264; in 1831, 272; in 1841, 603; and in 1851, 1,607. The Hartlepool branch of the North-Eastern Railway extends into this township. At the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, there were sixteen villans here, holding, paying, and working like those of Boldon. The smith held an oxgang of fifteen acres for his service; the whole vill paid 11s for cornage, and provided one milch cow. The punder held eight acres, and paid 40 hens, 300 eggs, and 4s. The demesne was farmed with a stock of 5 draughts and 200 sheep, and paid 24 chalders of corn, as many of oats, and 12c of barley; and four marks for the stock of sheep. In 1350, Edmund de Denum died seised of a messuage and 24 acres in Shotton, held of the bishop by fealty and 4s. exchequer rent. By decree, August 16th, 1673, a division of common lands was made.

The Village of Shotton is about two miles south from Easington, and twelve from Sunderland. The school was founded by Edward Whalton, Esq., who, by will, dated 1768, bequeathed a house and garden in Shotton as a school-room and residence for the master; and endowed it with a share of £2,000 (see Bishop Auckland, page 282) for teaching twenty poor children. William Dunn, of Easington, in December 1760, gave £40 to the township of Shotton, to be applied to the education of the poor children of the township. This request produces £2 per annum, which, with £20 from Walton's Charity, is paid to the schoolmaster, who has the use of the house and garden, and the payments from the children who are not under the endowment. The school, which has an average attendance of fifty children of both sexes, is efficiently conducted by Mr. Henry Fenwick.

Shotton Hall, a commodious mansion, situated east of the village, is the property of the Haswell Coal Company, and is at present the residence of Robert Calverley Bewick, Esq.

New Shotton is an extensive colliery village in this township, consisting principally of workmen's houses. In 1845, it was proposed to the ecclesiastical commissioners that the townships of Shotton and Haswell should be formed into a district parish, under the church endowment act; and subscriptions were at once commenced to raise the necessary funds for the erection of a church and parsonage. The foundation-stone of the church was laid on the 11th September, 1852, and the edifice was consecrated July 11th, 1854. It is dedicated to St. Saviour, and is expected to be a distinct chapelry district; but no permanent endowment has yet been made, and it is at present a chapel of ease to the mother church of Easington. It is an elegant structure, in the early English style, and consists of nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a porch and vestry, but without either tower or spire, and will accommodate about 400 persons. The rector of Easington is patron, and the Rev. Boulby Haslewood, curate.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have commodious chapels here.

The Colliery School, which is large and convenient, is supported by the colliery company, and attended by about 160 children. There is an excellent library in connection with the school, which contains upwards of 1,000 volumes. Robert Dote, teacher.

Shotton Grange Colliery was commenced by the Haswell Coal Company in 1841, and, up to 1849, the undertaking had cost nearly £120,000, from which neither profit nor interest had been derived. The Hutton seam was found to be inferior in quality, and hence the five-quarter was worked first; after which the Beaumont, or Harvey seam, below the Hutton, was sunk to. A drift was also made through the Hett dyke, and the good Hutton seam on the north side was thus reached, by means of which a direct under ground communication was made between the Shotton and Haswell Collieries. The five-quarter seam, three feet, six inches thick, is at the depth of 127 fathoms; the main, four feet thick, is 14 fathoms lower; the low main, three feet seven inches, 20 fathoms; and the Hutton seam, four feet, 19 fathoms deeper; being 180 fathoms in all. The depth to the Harvey seam is 210 fathoms. The coals are called in the market, Shotton Wallsend, and Shotton Unscreened.

KELLOE PARISH.

This parish comprises the townships of Kelloe, Cassop, Coxhoe, and Quarrington, the three latter of which were severed from Easington Ward and joined to that of Durham by the act of 6 George IV., c. 43.

CASSOP township is principally the property of William Jones, Esq., R. H. Philipson, Esq., John Gibson, Esq., and Messrs. John and William Reed. Its area is 1,622 acres, and its rateable value £3,217 7s. Its population in 1801 was 53; in 1811, 59; in 1821, 78; in 1831, 69; in 1841, 1,076; and in 1851, 1,769 souls. This great and rapid increase is owing to the opening and working of new mines. Here are two collieries, affording employment to great numbers of the inhabitants. The coals are conveyed to Hartlepool by rail, where they are shipped for London, and other places. Cassop was anciently included in Quarringtonshire; and we learn from Boldon Book that William de Kent held four ox-gangs of land here, for which he served on embassies. At the time of Hatfield's Survey the same land were held by Thomas Clerk, of Elvet, by similar service, and rendered 6s. 8d. The vill has since been held by lease under the see of Durham.

The Village of Cassop is situated about four miles south-east-by-east of Durham, and is principally occupied by farmers.

New Cassop, a colliery village, in this township, is pleasantly situated on the declivity of a hill, and commands interesting views of the neighbouring country. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, a neat stone building, erected in 1842, at a cost of £200, and will accommodate about 300 persons. There is a day school in connection with this chapel, which is conducted by Mr.

Henry Hinchcliffe. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel here, which was erected in 1842, at an expense of £150; and the Wesleyan Methodist reformers have also a place of worship.

Tursdale, a manor in this township, situated to the west of Cassop, was anciently the property of the Botelers, De Trillesdens, and Elmedens; from the latter of whom it was transferred by marriage to the Bulmers. It was subsequently held by the Howard family. The site of the old manor-house is now occupied by a farmstead.

Coxhoe township comprises an area of 1,055 acres, and its rateable value is £4,869. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 117; in 1811, 171; in 1821, 192; in 1831, 154; in 1841, in consequence of the working of new mines, 3,904; and in 1851, 4,101. This township is not mentioned in Boldon Book. In the tenth year of the episcopacy of Bishop Beaumont, John Denum died seised of a moiety of the vill, with a mine of coal there, which he held of the bishop in capite, and also a messuage and twelve acres, which he held of Thomas de Cornford. The family of Blackiston acquired considerable possessions here before the time of Bishop Hatfield, though it appears, by that prelate's survey, that a resident family had assumed the local name. The Blackistons held the manor till 1621, when it passed by marriage to William Kennett, Esq., from whose descendants it was purchased by John Burdon, Esq., in 1749. The principal landowners at present are, the trustees of the late James Farrish, Esq., of London. The South Hetton Coal Company have extensive collieries here, the produce of which are shipped at Hartlepool; there are also iron works, and a brick and tile manufactory.

The Village of Coxhoe is situated five miles south-south-east of Durham, on the road from that city to Sedgfield. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels here, and also at East Hetton, a colliery village in this township. Quarrington Hill, another village in Coxhoe township, also contains a Wesleyan chapel. Schools are attached to each of these places of worship.

KELLOE township comprises an area of 1,592 acres, and its rateable value is £2,727 9s. The population in 1801 was 80; in 1811, 72; in 1821, 101; in 1831, 102; in 1841, 156; and in 1851, 149 souls. The principal landowner is the Marchioness of Londonderry, who is also the possessor of the manorial rights and privileges. "There were formerly two Kelloes," says Mackenzie, "Kellaw Magna and Kellaw Parva. The former is identified with the freehold manor and vill lying north of Kelloe Beck, and includes the site of the modern village." The township, at an early period, was held by a family bearing the local name, from whom it passed in the eleventh year of the episcopate of Bishop Langley to the Fossours. It subsequently came into the possession of the Tempests, from whom it has descended to the present proprietor. The Nevilles also appear to have held lands here.

Kelloe township contains the village called Kelloe Town, and the hamlet called Church Kelloe; the latter of which is situated half a mile west of the former, and contains the parish church. It is five and-a-half miles south-south-east of Durham, and five miles north of Sedgfield.

The Church, dedicated to St. Helen, stands in a deep valley, to the north of Kelloe Beck, and is an ancient structure, with a square tower at the west end, containing two bells. A new chancel was added to the east end in 1854, at a cost of £600; and the edifice will now accommodate about 240 persons. "John Fitz-Henry de Kellaw and Elizabeth, his sister, by indenture with Thomas Hoton, chaplain, in 1347, founded a chantry at the altar of the Blessed Mary in the church of Little Kellaw, for the daily celebration of mass for the good estate of the same John and Elizabeth, and for the souls of their parents and all the parishioners of Kellaw." In 1352 this family appropriated all their lands in Thornlaw, of £10 value, to the support of this chantry. The parish register commences in 1693. The living is a vicarage, valued in the Liber Regis at £20; gross income, £231. The tithes were commuted in 1839, aggregate amount £175 15s. 7d. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; vicar, the Rev. Rowland Webster, M.A.

The Vicarage is a handsome structure, close to the church, erected in 1854. The old vicarage is occupied as a private school, which is conducted by Miss Anne Appleby.

Kelloe Hall, which now serves as a farm house, is occupied by Mr. Edward Gibson.

Charity.—Henry Airey, by will, February 1st, 1680, bequeathed to the poor of the parish of Kelloe £5, to be put out on good security, and the interest thereof to be distributed amongst the said poor by the minister and churchwardens there yearly, on the anniversary of his decease. A sum of 5s. a year on account of this charity is distributed yearly amongst the poor of the old parish of Kelloe.

QUARRINGTON township is principally leasehold property, and the Bishop of Durham is lord of the manor. Its area is 1,589 acres, and the rateable value £3,294. It contained in 1801, 112 inhabitants; in 1811, 143; in 1821, 177; in 1831, 173; in 1841, 732; and in 1851, 1,063 souls. Heugh Hall, Bowburn, and Crow Trees Collieries are in this township, and afford employment to the greater portion of the inhabitants. Quarrington is supposed to derive its name from the quarries in the neighbourhood. About the year 1183, the village was the capital of a district called Queringdonshire, which included Sherburn, Shadforth, and Cassop; the punder of which had twenty acres as the fee of his office, and rendered six score hens and 1,000 eggs. In the time of Bishop Pudsey, four caracutes of Queringdon demesne, with the sheep, stock, and pasture, were in the lord's hands. The greve held an ox-gang of land for his service, and the smith twelve acres. This shire paid 64s. for cornage, and provided three milch cows. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, Queringdon Grange, with its demesnes, meadows, and pasture, was held by the master of Sherburn Hospital, under the yearly rent of £18 18s.

The Village of Quarrington is situated about five miles south-east of the city of Durham.

MONK HESLEDEN PARISH.

This parish includes the townships of Hulam, Hutton Henry, Monk Hesleden, and Sheraton. It is bounded on the north by Castle Eden, on the north-west by Trindon chapelry, on the west by Kelloe, on the south by Hart and on the east by the German Ocean.

HULAM is a small township, situated about a mile south of Castle Eden, its acreage, annual value, &c., are returned with Sheraton. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 7; in 1811, 11; in 1821, 16; in 1831, 15; in 1841, 11; and in 1851, 10. It appears to have been anciently called Holme, and was held at an early period by the Claxton family, who were its possessors till the reign of Elizabeth, when it was sold to Edmund Perkyunson, of Newcastle, coming afterwards to the Strodes and Carrs, from the latter of whom it passed to the Wilkinsons, the present proprietors. It is occupied by Mr. Francis Emmerson.

HUTTON HENRY township comprises an area of 1,987 acres, and its rateable value is £2,299 10s. The population in 1801 was 156; in 1811, 155; in 1821, 174; in 1831, 162; in 1841, 287; and in 1851, 1,067 souls. This great increase is attributed to the opening of collieries. The principal landowners are F. A. Millbank, Esq. (who is also lord of the manor), R. S. D. Roper, Esq., W. Snowball, Esq., Marshall Fowler, Esq., Rowland Burdow Esq., Lord Howdon, Mr. Charles Ellison, Rev. F. A. Slater, Rev. G. F. Fox the trustees of the late Anthony Wilkinson, Esq., and others. From Boldre Book we learn that Hutton paid 35s. for cornage, provided one castleman and one milch cow, and paid to the bishop eight chalders of malt, and the like quantity of meal and of oats. In Hatfield's Survey, Henry de Esh is mentioned as a free tenant, holding the vill of Huton, and four parcels of land there, by foreign service, rendering 53s. 6d.; and he with several others are stated to hold lands in drengage. The family of Esh continued the proprietors till the reign of Elizabeth, when Richard Esh sold it to William Wyvil by whom it was afterwards conveyed to the family of Maire. It is now possessed by the gentlemen above mentioned.

The Village of Hutton Henry occupies an elevated situation, about two miles south of Castle Eden, and contains a Chapel of Ease to Monk Hesleden. There is a neat Catholic Chapel, dedicated to Sts. Peter and Paul, with a dwelling-house adjoining, called Hutton House, which were erected in 1834 by the present priest, the Very Rev. Canon Slater. There is also a Primitive Methodist Chapel.

Rodridge is a considerable village in this township, where there is a large colliery and fire brick works, which afford employment to a considerable number of persons.

MONK HESLEDEN township is principally the property of the representatives of the late Mrs. Burdon, F. A. Millbank, Esq., Rowland Burdon, Esq., Lady Sharp, the representatives of the late Anthony Wilkinson, Esq., and the representatives of the late Emmerson Jackson, Esq. Its area is 2,458 acres, and its annual value £4,310. The population in 1801 was 150; in 1811, 48; in 1821, 164; in 1831, 176; in 1841, 490; and in 1851, 1,495 souls. This increase is attributable to the formation of the Hartlepool Railway, which extends into this township, and the opening of new collieries. The Butterknowle Slip-dyke runs eastward from the sea at Hesleden Dene, parallel with the Hett Dyke (see page 594), and at an average distance of three miles to the south. This dyke throws the strata forty fathoms downwards, and affords the only instance in which the new red sandstone is thus brown in. Bishop Carileph granted Monk Hesleden to the prior and convent of Durham, who continued its possessors till the dissolution of the greater monasteries, when it became vested in the crown. The advowson of the vicarage and the great tithes were restored to the new cathedral church at Durham; and Queen Elizabeth granted Hesleden Hall to Robert Bowes, Esq., of Barnes. The estate was subsequently much divided, and is now held by the persons above-mentioned.

The Village of Monk Hesleden is situated in a deep wooded dene or valley, about a mile-and-a-half from the sea, and two-and-a-half miles east-south-east of Castle Eden.

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a plain, unadorned structure, consisting of nave, chancel, and a low tower. The baptismal font and pulpit are in keeping with the building. The parish register commences in 1578. The St. Godric's (Catholic) Church is a plain building, containing sittings 400 persons; it has a school attached which is well attended. The church is served from Sedgefield by the Rev. William Markland.

The Thornley Colliery School, which is patronised and partly supported by the coal company, is attended by about 120 children of both sexes. Mr. Usher and Jane Thompson, teachers.

Thornley Colliery is very extensive, and gives employment to about 400 persons. Thomas Wood, Esq., and partners, proprietors.

TRIMDON PARISH.

Trimdon parish, which comprises no dependant townships, is bounded on north by Kelloe, on the west by Garmondsway Moor, on the south by Igefiefield, and on the east by Kelloe. It comprises an area of 2,280 acres, and its rateable value is £4,120 5s. The principal landowners are R. S. D.

Roper, Esq., Robert Hoggott, Esq., the Hon. Hamilton Russell, George Rdy, Esq., Anthony Darling, Esq., Rev. H. Williamson, and Major-general Ckwith, who is also lord of the manor. "At Trimdon, King Canute coming pilgrimage to holy St. Cuthbert, lighted from his horse, and having his own shaven, travelled barefooted and bareheaded to the holy shrine." Bishop William de Sancta Barbara, with the consent of his chapter, gave the arch of Trimdon to Guisborough Priory about the year 1146; and Bishop Or, with like consent, gave the manor to that priory in free and perpetual use, which was confirmed by the king. After the suppression of the monastic establishments, the manor and patronage of the church were sold, and became the property of the Ropers, who had their family mansion here. There are extensive collieries in this township, in which the greater portion of the inhabitants are employed. The population in 1801 was 8; in 1811, 274; in 1821, 302; in 1831, 276; in 1841, 382; and in 1851, 1,598 souls. The building of two villages in this parish consequent on the opening of new collieries, accounts for the increase in the number of inhabitants.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a small dilapidated building, erected in the fifteenth century, and occupies the centre of the village. It consists of nave and chancel, and will accommodate about 100 persons. The living is a perpetual curacy, of the certified value of £21 5s.; gross income, £103. The tithes were commuted in 1839, aggregate amount 184 17s. 2d. The parish register commences in 1720. Patron, Major-General Beckwith; incumbent, Rev. George Sproston.

The Parochial School will accommodate about fifty pupils, and is supported by an endowment from land. Henry Airey also left £5 a year for the gratuitous education of ten poor children; this latter endowment, however, has been stopped by the present incumbent. William Broader, teacher.

New Trimdon, a colliery village in this parish, contains a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, formed out of two houses, purchased in 1845, and which will accommodate about 300 persons.

Trimdon Grange is another colliery village, containing an excellent school, erected by the proprietors of the colliery in 1859, and used as a place of worship on Sundays by the Primitive Methodists. It is attended by about 50 children of both sexes, and is efficiently conducted by Joseph Howard and Miss B. Maughan, teachers. There is also a Mechanics' Institute established here in a room, the property of the colliery owners, which possesses a library of 200 volumes, and numbers eighty members. Robert Swinburn, secretary; James Hall, librarian.

Charities.—In addition to the school endowments, Trimdon possesses the following charities, viz.:—By the will of John Airey, it appears that the interest of £50 (part of a sum of £200 advanced on certain property in Trimdon) should be applied for the putting out the poor children of the parish, yearly, apprentices. Henry Airey, by will, February 1st, 1680, left to the poor of the town of Trimdon £50, to be invested by the minister, churchwardens, and four of the parishioners, the interest to be by them distributed amongst the poor of the said town yearly, on the day of his decease, reserving 5s. yearly to the parish for the commemoration; and it is stated in the parliamentary returns of 1786 that, in 1718, Ann Lister bequeathed to the poor £40, that John Woodifield left £20, and that £40 was advanced to the township, to complete the purchase of some lands left by Ann Lister in 1715. These consist of three closes, containing between eleven and twelve acres, and are now let at the yearly rent of £32. The trustees receive the rent, and pay it over to the minister, churchwardens, and overseers, for distribution. One-fourth of the sum is set apart in respect of the gift of Henry Airey, for placing out apprentices. One other fourth part is given away on the 10th July, under the name of Ann Lister's Benefaction. Of the remaining half of the rent 5s. is paid to the minister for preaching a sermon on the 28th February, in commemoration of Henry Airey, and the residue given away on the same day, or soon afterwards, to the poor of the parish. In the parliamentary returns of 1786 it is stated that Bryan Roper gave to the poor of this parish. A piece of ground in Trimdon, called the Paddock, containing about an acre, is supposed to have been the land bequeathed to the poor of this parish. The rent of this land, about £5 per annum, is distributed by the churchwardens amongst the poor of the parish.

WINGATE GRANGE CHAPELRY.

This chapelry district was formed from the parishes of Kelloe and Castle en, by order in council, 3rd June, 1842. It comprises an area of 4,154 as, and the rateable value is £4,815. The population in 1801 was 135; 1811, 151; in 1821, 131; in 1831, 115; in 1841, in consequence of the cease of mining operations, it had attained to 2,625; and in 1851, 2,456 ls. Here is an extensive colliery, worked by Lord Howden, and employing ut 400 men and boys. The pit is eighty-five fathoms deep. The North-tern Railway extends into this township, and has a station about a quarter a mile from the village. Hugh, the son of Pinton, is mentioned in a rter of Bishop William as proprietor of Wingate. Bishop Pudsey gave place to the monastery of Finchale, to which the greater part of it seems ave belonged till the dissolution of the religious houses. Wingate Grange nerly belonged to the convent of Durham, and was valued at £12 13s. 4d. annum; but Queen Elizabeth, in the 41st year of her reign, granted it to tchurche and Best, two gentlemen of London. The principal landowners resent in the township are Frederick A. Milbank, Esq., Lord Howden, r. Thomas Wilkinson, the trustees of the late Anthony Wilkinson, and the r. R. H. Williamson.

The Village of Wingate lies to the east of Thornley, ten miles east-th-east of Durham. Wingate Grange is now a considerable colliery age.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a neat stone edifice, erected the year 1841, and, with the school, cost £2,000, which was defrayed tly by subscriptions, and partly by grants from the ecclesiastical commis-sioners. It comprises nave, with aisles, and chancel, and contains 450 ings, 225 of which are free and unappropriated. Patron, the Bishop of rham; incumbent, the Rev. E. N. V. Boydell, who resides at the sonage, a short distance from the church.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have also chapels here. Wingate liery School, which is under the patronage of the Wingate Grange d Company, is attended by 100 boys and 40 girls. John Lonsdale, cher.

BISHOPWEARMOUTH PARISH.

Bishopwearmouth parish includes the townships of Bishopwearmouth, Wearmouth Pans, Burdon, Ryhope, Silksworth, and Tunstall. It is bounded on the north by the river Wear, on the west by Houghton-le-Spring, on the south by Seaham, and on the east by the German Ocean.

BISHOPWEARMOUTH township contains 2,665 acres, and its rateable value is £1,000. The population in 1801 was 6,126; in 1811, 7,060; in 1821, 7,060; in 1831, 14,462; in 1841, 23,693; and in 1851, 31,261. For directory, &c., of this township, see Sunderland, of which it forms a part.

Callion is a village in this township about two miles west-by-north of Sunderland.

BISHOPWEARMOUTH PANS township, which adjoins the above, comprises 1,000 acres. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 564; in 1811, 476; in 1821, 483; in 1831, 363; in 1841, 298; and in 1851, 316. — See Sunderland for directory, &c.

BURDON township is principally the property of John Gregson, Esq., and John Brough, the former being lord of the manor. Its area is 1,109 acres, and its rateable value £1,229 12s. 4d. The population in 1801 was 1,123 souls. This township was formerly held by a family bearing the name; but they never passed the rank of yeoman.

The Village of Burdon is situated on an eminence 4 miles south-by-west of Sunderland.

John and Henry Merriman, the executors of Thomas Lingstall, Esq., Mr. Martin Moor, William Robinson, Esq., George Hodgson, Esq., Mrs. Clarke, and Thomas Benson, Esq. The area of the township is 1,876 acres, and its rateable value £3,093 7s. 11d. The population in 1801 was 254; in 1811, 255; in 1821, 368; in 1831, 365; in 1841, 363; and in 1851, 475 souls. Here are two corn mills; and a limestone quarry, the property of the Sunderland Dock Company, for whom it is worked by Mr. George Moir. This township was formerly held by a resident, from whom it passed to the Freemans. In the Boldon Book it is recorded that the Bishop of Durham had in Ryhope and Burdon. The services were similar to those of Boldon.

The Village of Ryhope is delightful, about three-and-a-half miles south of Sunderland during the bathing season. The Chapel is a small but neat building, erected in 1780, and has a nave and small chancel. It is in Trimdon parish, which comprises no dependant townships, is bounded on the north by Kelloe, on the west by Garmondsway Moor, on the south by Sedgfield, and on the east by Kelloe. It comprises an area of 2,280 acres, and its rateable value is £4,120 5s. The principal landowners are R. S. D. R. Roper, Esq., Robert Hoggott, Esq., the Hon. Hamilton Russell, George Hardy, Esq., Anthony Darling, Esq., Rev. H. Williamson, and Major-general Beckwith, who is also lord of the manor. "At Trimdon, King Canute coming on pilgrimage to holy St. Cuthbert, lighted from his horse, and having his crown shaven, travelled barefooted and bareheaded to the holy shrine." Bishop William de Sancta Barbara, with the consent of his chapter, gave the church of Trimdon to Guisborough Priory about the year 1146; and Bishop Poor, with like consent, gave the manor to that priory in free and perpetual alms, which was confirmed by the king. After the suppression of the monastic establishments, the manor and patronage of the church were sold out, and became the property of the Ropers, who had their family mansion house here. There are extensive collieries in this township, in which the greater portion of the inhabitants are employed. The population in 1801 was 278; in 1811, 274; in 1821, 302; in 1831, 276; in 1841, 382; and in 1851, 1,598 souls. The building of two villages in this parish consequent on the opening of new collieries, accounts for the increase in the number of inhabitants.

TRIMDON PARISH.

The Village of Trimdon is situated on an eminence, three-and-a-half miles north-by-east of Sedgfield.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a small dilapidated building, erected in the fifteenth century, and occupies the centre of the village. It consists of nave and chancel, and will accommodate about 100 persons. The living is a perpetual curacy, of the certified value of £21 5s.; gross income, £103. The tithes were commuted in 1839, aggregate amount £184 17s. 2d. The parish register commences in 1720. Patron, Major-general Beckwith; incumbent, Rev. George Sproston.

The Parochial School will accommodate about fifty pupils, and is supported by an endowment from land. Henry Airey also left £5 a year for the gratuitous education of ten poor children; this latter endowment, however, has been stopped by the present incumbent. William Broader, teacher.

New Trimdon, a colliery village in this parish, contains a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, formed out of two houses, purchased in 1845, and which will accommodate about 300 persons.

Trimdon Grange is another colliery village, containing an excellent school, erected by the proprietors of the colliery in 1852, and used as a place of worship on Sundays by the Primitive Methodists. It is attended by about 150 children of both sexes, and is efficiently conducted by Joseph Howard and Miss B. Maughan, teachers. There is also a Mechanics' Institute established here in a room, the property of the colliery owners, which possesses a library of 200 volumes, and numbers eighty members. Robert Swinburn, secretary; James Hall, librarian.

Charities.—In addition to the school endowments, Trimdon possesses the following charities, viz.:—By the will of John Airey, it appears that the interest of £50 (part of a sum of £200 advanced on certain property in Trimdon) should be applied for the putting out the poor children of the parish, yearly, apprentices. Henry Airey, by will, February 1st, 1680, left to the poor of the town of Trimdon £50, to be invested by the minister, churchwardens, and four of the parishioners, the interest to be by them distributed amongst the poor of the said town yearly, on the day of his death reserving 5s. yearly to the parish for the commemoration; and it is stated in the parliamentary returns of 1786 that, in 1718, Ann Lister bequeathed to the poor £40, that John Woodifield left £20, and that £40 was advanced by the township, to complete the purchase of some lands left by Ann Lister in 1715. These consist of three closes, containing between eleven and twelve acres, and are now let at the yearly rent of £32. The trustees receive the rent, and pay it over to the minister, churchwardens, and overseers, for distribution. One-fourth of the sum is set apart in respect of the gift of John Airey, for placing out apprentices. One other fourth part is given away on the 10th July, under the name of Ann Lister's Benefaction. Of the remaining half of the rent 5s. is paid to the minister for preaching a sermon on the 28th February, in commemoration of Henry Airey, and the residue is given away on the same day, or soon afterwards, to the poor of the parish. In the parliamentary returns of 1786 it is stated that Bryan Roper gave land to the poor of this parish. A piece of ground in Trimdon, called the Paddock, containing about an acre, is supposed to have been the land bequeathed. The rent of this land, about £5 per annum, is distributed by the churchwardens amongst the poor of the parish.

WINGATE GRANGE CHAPELRY.

This chapelry district was formed from the parishes of Kelloe and Castle Eden, by order in council, 3rd June, 1842. It comprises an area of 4,154 acres, and the rateable value is £4,815. The population in 1801 was 135; in 1811, 151; in 1821, 131; in 1831, 115; in 1841, in consequence of the increase of mining operations, it had attained to 2,625; and in 1851, 2,456 souls. Here is an extensive colliery, worked by Lord Howden, and employing about 400 men and boys. The pit is eighty-five fathoms deep. The North-Eastern Railway extends into this township, and has a station about a quarter of a mile from the village. Hugh, the son of Pinton, is mentioned in a charter of Bishop William as proprietor of Wingate. Bishop Pudsey gave his place to the monastery of Finchale, to which the greater part of it seems to have belonged till the dissolution of the religious houses. Wingate Grange formerly belonged to the convent of Durham, and was valued at £12 13s. 4d. per annum; but Queen Elizabeth, in the 41st year of her reign, granted it to Eastchurch and Best, two gentlemen of London. The principal landowners at present in the township are Frederick A. Milbank, Esq., Lord Howden, Rev. Thomas Wilkinson, the trustees of the late Anthony Wilkinson, and the Rev. R. H. Williamson.

The Village of Wingate lies to the east of Thornley, ten miles east-south-east of Durham. Wingate Grange is now a considerable colliery village.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a neat stone edifice, erected in the year 1841, and, with the school, cost £2,000, which was defrayed partly by subscriptions, and partly by grants from the ecclesiastical commissioners. It comprises nave, with aisles, and chancel, and contains 450 sittings, 225 of which are free and unappropriated. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; incumbent, the Rev. E. N. V. Boydell, who resides at the Parsonage, a short distance from the church.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have also chapels here. Wingate Colliery School, which is under the patronage of the Wingate Grange Coal Company, is attended by 100 boys and 40 girls. John Lonsdale, teacher.

Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, erected in 1824, and containing 350 sittings, 150 of which are free. The Primitive Methodists have also a chapel here.

The National and Barrington School is a stone building, erected by subscription in 1834, at a cost of £350, and is attended by about 200 scholars. It is under the patronage of the Hetton Coal Company, the Hon. Mrs. Russell Barrington, Colonel Shepherdson, and the Rev. George T. Fox. — Wilson and Mary Ann Hall, teachers.

Hetton-le-Hole Reading Room, opened in November 1849, contains about 300 volumes, and is well supplied with the leading papers and periodicals. Rev. J. S. Nichol, M.A., and J.P., president; Mr. John Bustin, treasurer; Robert Errington, secretary; John Swallow and Robert Lawson, librarians.

Easington Lane is a village in this township, about a mile in length, where the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have each a chapel; that belonging to the former body was rebuilt and enlarged in 1853, at a cost of £400. Bethel chapel, belonging to the Independents, is a small structure, erected in 1832, and enlarged in 1842. There is a reading room here, which was established on the 25th September, 1850. The library contains nearly 200 volumes, and is supplied with the leading papers of the day, together with the various periodicals. It is supported by sixty members, who contribute 6d. a month. John Hunter, president; Stephen Roxly, treasurer; William Anderson, secretary; George Greenwell, librarian. Here is an academy, conducted by Mr. William Kirke, and opened on the 29th May, 1854, in which youths are instructed in the necessary branches of learning, to qualify them for public offices, commerce, the various branches of trade, and other pursuits.

Lyons is a village in this township, and close to Lyons Colliery. The Hetton Gas Works, established in 1855, by the Hetton Coal Company, are situated here, and contain one gasometer, capable of holding 14,000 cubic feet of gas, which is supplied to the villages of Easington Lane and Hetton-le-Hole at 3s. 6d. per 1,000 cubic feet. The cost of the works was £1,600. Mr. J. H. Little, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, engineer and contractor.

WINGATE GRANGE CHAPELRY.

This chapelry district was formed from the parishes of Kelloe and Castle Eden, by order in council, 3rd June, 1842. It comprises an area of 4,154 acres, and the rateable value is £4,815. The population in 1801 was 135; in 1811, 151; in 1821, 131; in 1831, 115; in 1841, in consequence of the increase of mining operations, it had attained to 2,625; and in 1851, 2,456 souls. Here is an extensive colliery, worked by Lord Howden, and employing about 400 men and boys. The pit is eighty-five fathoms deep. The North-Eastern Railway extends into this township, and has a station about a quarter of a mile from the village. Hugh, the son of Pinton, is mentioned in a charter of Bishop William as proprietor of Wingate. Bishop Pudsey gave his place to the monastery of Finchale, to which the greater part of it seems to have belonged till the dissolution of the religious houses. Wingate Grange formerly belonged to the convent of Durham, and was valued at £12 13s. 4d. per annum; but Queen Elizabeth, in the 41st year of her reign, granted it to Eastchurch and Best, two gentlemen of London. The principal landowners at present in the township are Frederick A. Milbank, Esq., Lord Howden, Rev. Thomas Wilkinson, the trustees of the late Anthony Wilkinson, and the Rev. R. H. Williamson.

The Village of Wingate lies to the east of Thornloy, ten miles east-south-east of Durham. Wingate Grange is now a considerable colliery village.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a neat stone edifice, erected in the year 1841, and, with the school, cost £2,000, which was defrayed partly by subscriptions, and partly by grants from the ecclesiastical commissioners. It comprises nave, with aisles, and chancel, and contains 450 sittings, 225 of which are free and unappropriated. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; incumbent, the Rev. E. N. V. Boydell, who resides at the Parsonage, a short distance from the church.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have also chapels here. Wingate Colliery School, which is under the patronage of the Wingate Grange Coal Company, is attended by 100 boys and 40 girls. John Lonsdale, teacher.

HERRINGTON (WEST) township contains 969 acres, and its rateable value is £2,202 15s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 209; in 1811, 253; in 1821, 329; in 1831, 381; in 1841, 343; and in 1851, 344. The principal landowners are the Earl of Durham and the Marchioness of Londonderry. There is a copperas manufactory in this township, close to the river Wear, now carried on by Mr. George Lindsay. In 1326 John de Denum died soised of the Wodechale, in West Herrington, with one caracute of land and five acres of woodland, held of the bishop by homage and fealty; and of one messuage and six acres in West Herrington, held of John Darcy. Knt., by homage, fealty, and suit at West Herrington Mill. The property here was afterwards much divided, and is now held by the persons mentioned above.

The Village of West Herrington is about four-and-a-half miles west-south-west of Sunderland. Here is a Chapel of Ease, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, a small neat building, in the Gothic style, erected in 1840, and contains about 200 sittings, the whole of which are free and unappropriated. This and Newbottle Church are attended by the Rev. George Snowden, one of the curates of Houghton-le-Spring. There is a parochial school attached to the chapel. Miss Ellen Armstrong, teacher.

HOUGHTON-LE-SPRING township is principally the property of the Earl of Durham, the Marchioness of Londonderry, the Hon. and Rev. John Grey, Thomas W. U. Robinson, Esq., M. D. C. Moneypenny, and Mr. Back. Its area is 1,475 acres, and its rateable value £8,081 10s. The population in

THE TOWN of Houghton-le-Spring is situated at the head of a beautiful vale, opening to the west, and sheltered from northern and eastern winds by the hills of Houghton and Wardenlaw. Within the last half century, it has undergone great improvement, and it now contains many large and handsome houses. Its population in 1851 was 3,224, of which 1,605 were males, and 1,619 females. There were at the same period 591 inhabited houses, 15 uninhabited, and 11 in course of erection. The weekly market, established in 1825, is held every Friday; and an annual feast is held on the Sunday after Michaelmas Day. Petty sessions are held here every alternate Tuesday; and the Bishop of Durham, lord of the manor, holds copyhold courts by his halmote clerk, twice in the year. The trade of this place depends mainly upon the numerous mines in the vicinity, the produce of which is sent by railway to different parts of the country.

The Church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a large and handsome cruciform structure, with a low tower springing from the intersection of the nave and transepts, and stands in a spacious church-yard, finely shaded with avenues of lime-trees. A porch, now used as a vestry, projects from the chancel parallel with the south transept; the tower contains six bells; and there is a gallery at the west end. Several of the windows have recently been filled with stained glass, by the present rector, who has also made considerable changes in the sittings and interior arrangements. The tomb of Bernard Gilpin, the apostle of the north, stands in the south transept; and is a massy altar tomb of freestone, with some ornaments of chain work on the sides, and on the west end the arms of Gilpin in bas-relief; viz., a boar under a tree. On each side of the escutcheon in raised letters, we read: BERNARD GILPIN' RECTOR HUIUS ECCLESIAE OBIT QUARTO DIE MARTII AN. DOM. 1583. Besides this tomb, there are a number of others in the church, that bear names of some note; there are memorials of the family of Belasyse, of Major Thomas Lilburne, one of the builders of the almshouses; of the Conyers, Ironsides, Lambtons, Carrs, Blacketts, &c., all eminent names in the north. There were in former ages, two guilds instituted in this church; one dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and the other to the Blessed Virgin; there was also a chantry, dedicated to St. Catherine, of the yearly value of £3 15s. The parish register commences in 1563. The living is a rectory in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, and valued in the Liber Regis at £124; gross income,

£2,553. Rector, the Hon. and Rev. John Grey, M.A.; curates, Rev. Robert Kirwood, Rev. Alfred John Blagdon, and Rev. George Snowden.

The Rectory is situated to the west of the church, and possesses ample and pleasant grounds.

St. Michael's (Catholic) Church is a neat and substantial building in the Gothic style, erected in 1837, and consists of a nave and chancel, with gallery and organ at the west end. At the north side of the high altar, stands a beautifully decorated altar of the Blessed Virgin. The church possesses sittings for about 500 persons. There is a spacious and well-ventilated school-room beneath the church, which will accommodate 200 children; and a handsome and convenient presbytery is attached. Rev. A. Watson, priest.

Besides these there is a Baptist Chapel, in Sunderland street, a small stone building, erected in 1823, at a cost of £400; a Presbyterian Chapel, in Newbottle-lane, erected in 1825, Rev. Alexander Shannen, minister; a Primitive Methodist Chapel, in Sunderland-street, opened in September 1855; and a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, in William-street, a stone building, erected in 1837, at an expense of £900, Rev. John H. Faull, minister.

The Royal Kepier Grammar School, situated at the top of the churchyard, was founded by the Rev. Bernard Gilpin, rector of Houghton-le-Spring, and John Heath, of Kepier, under the great seal of Queen Elizabeth, in the year 1574; and its income, including subsequent benefactions, now amounts to about £150 per annum. The terms for instruction in classics, mathematics, and the usual branches of a liberal English education are:—Board for pupil under thirteen years of age, thirty-five guineas per annum; above thirteen years of age, forty; washing, three guineas; tuition fee, eight guineas; modern languages, with the exception of German, are extras. There are six boys on the foundation, who may be prepared for the universities or any profession, free of expense, except the extra charges. A foundation scholarship, now vacant, tenable for three years at the University of Oxford, Cambridge, or Durham, has recently been founded. The present representatives of the founders are the Dowager Marchioness of Londonderry, and the rector of Houghton-le-Spring. Governors, Earl Vane and Viscount Dungannon; head master, the Rev. Gerard Moultrie, B.A., chaplain to the Marchioness of Londonderry; English and arithmetic master, George Calbraith; engineering and surveying master, Richard Wilson; French master, Mons. Bamberg; drawing master, G. J. Grant.

The Girls' Blue Coat School, in Newbottle-lane, founded by Sir G. Wheeler, for clothing and educating twenty-eight girls, was enlarged in 1803; twelve additional scholars being now educated at the expense of the ladies of Houghton, who remunerate the teacher by an annual contribution.

St. Michael's National or Parochial School is a neat stone building, erected in 1839, and contains apartments for boys and girls, with class rooms, &c. It will accommodate 300 children. James Young and Isabella Forbes, teachers.

The Wesleyan Methodist Day and Sunday School, close to the chapel, is a handsome stone building, in the Gothic style, erected in 1851, at a cost of £300. Henry P. Priddon, teacher. For other schools see Directory.

The Mechanics' Institution, situated on Quality Hill, is a commodious stone building, with square tower over the entrance, and was erected in 1851, at an expense of £500. The library contains nearly 900 volumes, many of which are standard works, and is supplied with the London and local papers, periodicals, &c. Thomas W. U. Robinson, Esq., president; Mr. George Elliott, vice-president; Mr. William Hopper, secretary; Mr. Robert T. Burn, treasurer; and Robert Wilkinson, librarian.

Houghton-le-Spring Church Institute, situated in Church-street, was established in 1854; it contains about 200 volumes, and is supplied with the leading newspapers, periodicals, &c. The Earl of Durham, patron; the Hon. and Rev. John Grey, M.A., president; Mr. James Young, secretary and librarian.

The Gas Works, established by a private company in 1838, are situated in Newbottle Lane, and produce daily about 15,000 cubic feet of gas, which is supplied to thirty-six public lamps at £2 each per annum; and to the colliery in Newbottle Lane, with the churches, chapels, houses, and shops in the town, at 1s. 6d. per 1,000 cubic feet. E. D. Welford, treasurer and managing director; Thomas Hewitson, secretary.

Houghton-le-Spring Poor Law Union comprises an area of 16,202 acres, and its population in 1851 was 19,564 souls. It comprises the sub-districts of Houghton-le-Spring and Hetton-le-Hole, the former of which includes the townships of Silksworth, East and Middle Herrington, West Herrington, Offerton, Painshaw, Newbottle, Morton Grange, Houghton-le-Spring, and Wardenlaw; and the latter, those of Great Eppleton, Little Eppleton, Hetton-le-Hole, East Rainton, West Rainton, Moorsley, and Moorhouse. The receipts for the year ending September 23rd, 1855, amounted to £5,253 16s. 3d., and the expenditure to £4,463 16s. 10d. The Union Workhouse is in Sunderland-street, and was established in 1839. The present number of paupers is 24. Henry Fairbairn, master; Mary Fairbairn, matron. John R. Legge, clerk to the board of guardians.

Davenport and Lilburne's Alms Houses stand in the Churchyard, to the south of the Grammar School, and were commenced in 1666, by George Lilburne, of Offerton, who built the north wing of the hospital, and endowed it with £10 per annum, issuing out of freehold tenements in Sunderland, for the maintenance of three poor persons. George Davenport, rector of Houghton, added the south wing, and not having lived to complete the endowment, left £160 to the governors of the Grammar School to purchase lands, or a yearly rent-charge of £10 per annum, for the maintenance of three poor persons, to be chosen out of the poor inhabitants of the parish by the governors, with the advice of the rector. Dr. Bagshaw's and Sir G. Wheeler's bequests to Davenport's part of the hospital will be found noticed in the account of the charities. Miss D. Spearman having acquired the estate of her relative, the Rev. W. Sharp, vicar of Sherborne, in Derbyshire, a native of Houghton-le-Spring, purchased £600 stock in the Three-per-cents Consols, and settled it upon Lilburne's end of the alms house, raising the three pensioners there to an equality of income with those in Davenport's end.

Charities.—The Rev. Henry Bagshaw, D.D., by will, November 10th, 1708, bequeathed to trustees certain lands, the rents of which were to be applied in the following manner, viz.:—£3 yearly to the principal schoolmaster of Houghton, and 40s. to the usher, and 40s. yearly to Davenport's part of the hospital, and the residue to be distributed to the poor of Houghton. This charity is distributed in accordance with the intentions of the donor. Sir George Wheeler, Knt., D.D., by his will, bearing date 23rd May, 1719, bequeathed to trustees £600, which he directed to be expended in the purchase of land, out of the rents of which they were to pay £10 yearly to the schoolmistress of the charity school at Houghton, £2 10s. yearly to the usher of the free school at the same place, provided he should teach the charity children every Thursday afternoon writing and arithmetic; £10 yearly for buying clothes for the twelve charity female children belonging to the township of Houghton only, and £2 10s. for repairing the Gate House where the charity school was then kept, or providing another place, if necessary; and he directed that the remainder of the rent should be applied in providing books, &c. With the exception of some slight alterations, which have been made to increase the efficiency of this charity, the directions of the donor have been faithfully adhered to. William Carr, as stated in the will of the Rev. Bernard Gilpin, bearing date 17th October, 1582, gave out of his lands in Cocken a rent of five marks yearly, whereof 40s. was assigned to be bestowed upon the school, or upon the scholars of the school, and the other four nobles were appointed to be bestowed yearly upon the poor of Houghton parish. The agent of the estate at Cocken pays the yearly sum of £2 to the master of the Free Grammar School, and £1 6s. 8d. yearly to the churchwardens of Houghton, for the benefit of the poor. This last-mentioned sum is given away, with the other charity money, on New Year's Day. The rector of Newcastle, under the will of John Frankelcyn, transmits to the churchwardens of Houghton £1 6s. 8d., which is paid to the poor. Dame Isabella Carr, by will, dated 7th March, 1721, gave £60, the interest thereof to be distributed yearly at Christmas to the poor of Houghton-le-Spring and Cocken. Among other documents belonging to the charities in the possession of the rector, there is a memorandum signed by Ralph Carr, Esq., Dr. Secker, the then rector, and other persons, bearing date 26th March, 1727, stating that it was agreed that the annual interest of £40, part of Lady Carr's legacy of £60, should be distributed yearly to the poor of the township of Houghton; and the annual interest of £20, the remainder thereof, to the poor of Cocken, by the direction of Ralph Carr, Esq., and his heirs, and the said Ralph Carr thereby acknowledged the receipt of the said £20, the interest whereof was to be distributed as aforesaid. The sum of £40, with the amount of other benefactions, the origin of which could not be ascertained by the commissioners, is probably comprised in a sum of £200, put out on security of the tolls of the turnpike-road from Durham to Sunderland. Interest is paid on this sum at five per cent., and the amount is added to the produce of other charities, and divided at a vestry meeting amongst the overseers of the different townships of the parish, except Cocken, in proportion to the population. The sum paid to each overseer is distributed by them to their respective poor. With respect to the sum of £20, which was paid to Ralph Carr, Esq., for the poor of Cocken, nothing appears to have been paid to the poor specifically as the interest of this money for many years. John Tempest, Esq., by his will, bearing date 1st April, 1794, gave to trustees such a sum of money as should be sufficient to purchase in their names £1,200 Three-per-cent Consols, upon trust, to pay the dividends yearly in such proportions as they should think fit, to the widows of six pitmen for their lives, whose husbands should have been usually employed as pitmen in the time of the testator's father or his own time, working the Painshaw and Rainton collieries, such six widows to be nominated by the trustees; and, in case the collieries should cease to be worked, so that there should be no such widows to be nominated, that the trustees should nominate six widows whom they should think fit objects of charity, and pay them the dividends in like manner. The dividends, amounting to £36 a year, are divided as the testator directed.

Biography.—Bernard Gilpin was born in Westmoreland, in 1517, and from his youth was thoughtful and serious. He was sent to Oxford at an early age, where he publicly disputed against Hooper and the celebrated Peter Martyr, "who," says Howit, "were not only struck with his learning and ability, but much more with his obvious conscientious honesty; and they prayed earnestly for his conversion. This, from further enquiries, became the case." He afterwards travelled on the continent, spending three years in Holland, Germany, and France, whence he returned during the reign of Mary, and was presented by his uncle, Tunstall, with the rectory of Easington, and made archdeacon of Durham. These he shortly afterwards resigned, and accepted the rectory of Houghton, where he preached and laboured with the greatest zeal. Being afterwards accused of heresy, he was cited to appear in London, but Mary dying before his arrival in that city, he returned to his parish, amid the joyful acclamations of his people, where he continued to live and labour in all good works. He established schools, obtaining his masters from Oxford, and when he met a boy upon the road he would make a trial of his capacity by a few questions; and, if he found him to his mind, he sent him to school, and if he there kept up his first promise, afterwards to the university. His hospitable manner of living was the admiration of the whole country, and strangers and travellers met with a cheerful reception. Every Sunday, from Michaelmas to Easter, was a sort of public day with him; and during this season he expected to see his parishioners and their families, whom he seated according to their ranks, at three tables; and when absent from home, the same establishment was kept up. Lord Burleigh, when Lord Treasurer, visited Gilpin on his way into Scotland, and made him great offers of advancement, which he respectfully, but firmly declined, "feeling persuaded," says one of his biographers, "that he was in a far more useful sphere than a bishopric." Loved as he was, he still had numerous enemies, who poisoned the mind of Bishop Barnes against him, and obtained his suspension from all his ecclesiastical offices. He was afterwards summoned to meet the bishop and the rest of the clergy in the church at Chester-le-Street, where, being freed from his suspension and positively ordered to preach, he fearlessly exposed the enormities which the bishop allowed in his diocese, and when he descended from the pulpit, his friends were grieved at the hold he had given his enemies, who rejoiced at his discourse, thinking his doom was now sealed. The sequel is best told by Carleton, who says, "The clergy dined with the bishop, and Gilpin's friends and enemies silently awaited the event. Gilpin came to take his leave of the bishop, and to return homewards. 'It shall not be so,' answered the bishop, 'for I will bring you to your house.' And when they were now come to Master Gilpin's parsonage, and walked within the parlour, the bishop, on a sudden, caught Mr. Gilpin by the hand. 'Father Gilpin,' said he, 'I do acknowledge you are fitter to be Bishop of Durham than myself to be parson of this church of yours. I aske forgiveness for errors past; forgive me, father. I knowe you have hatched some chickens that now seeke to pecke out your eyes, but so long as I shall live Bishop of Durham be secure—no one shall hurt you.' All good men rejoiced, and Gilpin reaped in peace and security the fruit of a pious life in all plentiful manner." His worthy biographer adds, "meanwhile age began to grow upon him. After his lean body was quite worn out with diversity of pain-taking, at the last even, feeling beforehand the approach of death, he commanded the poor to be called together, unto whom he made a speech, and took his leave of them. Afterwards he did the like to others. He used many exhortations to his scholars, to his servants, and divers others, and fell asleep in great peace in the sixty-sixth year of his age, in the year of our Lord 1583."

Chilton Moor is a hamlet one mile west of Houghton town, inhabited by persons employed in the various mining departments. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, erected in 1820, by the colliery owners. There is also a reading-room, which was established in 1849, and now contains upwards of 200 volumes. Mr. George Elliott, president; George Southern, treasurer; Edward Charlton and Thomas Lee, librarians.

Colliery Row is another hamlet in this township, about three-quarters of a mile west of Houghton-le-Spring

MORTON GRANGE township is situated in the vale to the west of Houghton-le-Spring, and comprises an area of 505 acres. It contained in 1801, 188 inhabitants; in 1811, 251; in 1821, 308; in 1831, 295; in 1841, 185; and in 1851, 185. The Earl of Durham is lord of the manor and principal landowner; and the rateable value is £1,505. From Boldon Book, we learn that in Morton there were sixteen farmers, who held twenty-five ox-gangs each, consisting of twelve acres, and rendered eightpence, and performed twenty days' work in autumn, with one man for each ox-gang, and harrowed during eight days, with one horse for every two ox-gangs. They tilled four ridges of land, like those of Warden; and led hay and grain six days, and carried eight loads in the year to Durham, or four to Auckland; and for every carucate of land they ploughed one acre of the lord's land (at Houghton), and rendered hens and eggs in the same proportion as Warden. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, the same services appear, but commuted in part for a money payment.

It was leased by the Belasyse family, in the sixteenth century, and continued in their possession till the latter end of the seventeenth, when it passed to the Smiths.

At Fence Houses, in this township, there is a station on the North-Eastern Railway.

NEWBOTTLE township is principally the property of the Earl of Durham, Sir William Maxwell, the executors of J. D. Nesham, Esq., Mrs. Byers, Thomas W. U. Robinson, Esq., and Mrs. Pemberton. Its area is 1,388 acres, and rateable value £4,522 9s. 7d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 970; in 1811, 1,224; in 1821, 2,306; in 1831, 2,198; in 1841, 1,835; and in 1851, 2,067. Here are collieries and earthenware manufactories, which afford employment to the principal portion of the inhabitants. The ancient servile tenures of lands in Newbottle is described in Boldon Book. "In Newbotil are sixteen cottagers, each of whom holds twelve acres, and performs two days' work in every week (for the lord) throughout the year; and cultivates four portions of land in autumn with all his family except the huswife; and renders one hen and five eggs. And three other cottagers hold six acres, and work from Pentecost to the feast of St. Martin, two days in every week. John, the son of Henry, holds a toft and twelve acres for twelve-pence rent, in exchange for the land which he formerly used to hold in Herington. The headborough holds twelve acres for his service. The smith twelve acres for his service. The punder twelve acres, and receives a thrave of corn from every caracute of land in Newbotil, Bedic, and Heryngton; and renders forty hens, and three hundred eggs. The demesne, consisting of four caracutes of land, with the sheep and the pasture, are in the hands of the bishop." At the time of Hatfield's Survey, Hugh de Boynton held thirteen acres of land, and one rood of demesne land, and rendered nine shillings for every acre. John Wilkynson and fourteen other tenants held 312 acres of the same demesne lands, and rendered as above. The bond lands were generally paid for in money. Subsequent records afford no instance of any tenure in chief, or by knight's service, in Newbottle; and the whole township is at this day held under the Bishop of Durham, either by leases for lives or years, or by copy of court-roll under the manor of Houghton. A division of the town lands, belonging to this township, was made in 1691.

The Village of Newbottle is pleasantly situated on an eminence, about one-and-a-half mile north of Houghton-le-Spring, and commands a good view of the adjacent country. Here is a chapel-of-ease to the parish church, a small but neat building, in the early English style, consisting of chancel, nave, and south transept. The windows are of stained glass; those in the chancel bearing representations of the Crucifixion, St. Michael, St. Matthew, &c. It was opened for service in October 1850, and consecrated by the Bishop of Durham on the 7th August, 1851. The ground for the chapel and burial ground was given by the Earl of Durham, who also subscribed liberally towards the building. The living is a curacy in the patronage of the rector of Houghton-le-Spring, and incumbency of the Rev. George Snowden. The Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have also places of worship here. The National School, established in 1842, is principally supported by the Earl of Durham, and is attended by about 120 children. Robert and Margaret Gray, teachers.

Bunker's Hill is a colliery hamlet, in this township, near Houghton-le-Spring, chiefly inhabited by the workmen employed in the adjoining collieries. Philadelphia, a village, in Newbottle township, the principal residents of which are pitmen, contains chapels belonging to the Wesleyans, the Primitive Methodists, the Wesleyan New Connexion, and the Wesleyan Association.

WARDENLAW is a small township, two miles east of Houghton-le-Spring, the principal landowners of which are George Gregson, Esq., and John Railton Esq., the former of whom is lord of the manor. Its area is 518 acres, and its rateable value £1,285 12s. 10d. It contained in 1801, 15 inhabitants; in 1811, 12; in 1821, 14; in 1831, 54; in 1841, 60; and in 1851, 54. Warden Law is the usual name of a lofty hill in this township, whose summit commands an uninterrupted view of the ancient principality of the bishops of Durham. At the time of the compilation of the Boldon Book, there were nine farmers in Warden, holding eighteen ox-gangs, each containing thirteen acres and a half. The whole township is held by copy of court-roll under the bishop's manor of Houghton.

Directory. — The farmers are William Haig, Wardenlaw North; John Heron, Wardenlaw South; Richard Thomas, Wardenlaw Hill; and John Wilson, Wardenlaw.

HYLTON, or LOW FORD CHAPELRY DISTRICT.

This chapelry district was formed by an order in council, in February 1844, and embraces the township of Ford, or South Hylton, formerly comprised in the parish of Bishopwearmouth. The township contains 1,000 acres, and its rateable value is £4,999 7s. 1d. The principal landowners are Joseph John Scurfield, Esq., and the Messrs. Fenwick, of Sunderland. The population in 1801 was 602; in 1811, 712; in 1821, 791; in 1831, 911; in 1841, 1,720; and in 1851, 1,922 souls. Shipbuilding is extensively carried on here, as also the manufacture of earthenware; and a branch of the iron trade has recently been established by Messrs. Walton and Usher. The manor of Ford, Grindon, and Clowcroft, belonged to the Hiltons from a very early period, until the final sale of the property of that family in 1750, when it became the property of several proprietors.

The Village of Ford extends along the south side of the Wear, from about two miles to four-and-a-half miles west of Sunderland.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small, but neat building, erected by the late Admiral Maling, and has been used as a licensed place of worship since October 1817. It was consecrated by the Bishop of Durham in 1821; and contains 400 sittings, one half of which are free and unappropriated. The living is in the gift of the Bishop of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. Joseph Law, B.A.

St. Mary's National School was erected by the late Rev. Robert Gray, in 1836, at a cost of £450. It contains separate apartments for boys and girls, and will accommodate about 250 scholars. The average number in attendance is 140. Thomas Brayfield and Ann H. Don, teachers.

For Directory, &c., see Sunderland.

MONKWEARMOUTH PARISH.

Monkwearmouth parish is bounded on the north by Whitburn, on the north-west by Boldon, on the west by Washington, on the south by the river Wear, and on the east by the German Ocean. It comprises the townships of Monkwearmouth, Monkwearmouth Shore, and Fulwell. This parish, though locally situated in the east division of Chester Ward, is now joined, in all civil matters, to the north division of Easington Ward; but for ecclesiastical affairs, remains incorporated with Chester deanery.

MONKWEARMOUTH township contains 616 acres, and its rateable value is £5,177 5s. 7d. The manorial rights are vested in the dean and chapter of Durham, who are also the principal landowners. The population in 1801 was 1,103; in 1811, 1,091; in 1821, 1,278; in 1831, 1,498; in 1841, 2,155; and in 1851, 3,366 souls.—For history, directory, &c., see Sunderland.

MONKWEARMOUTH SHORE township is the property of Sir Hedworth Williamson, Bart., of Whitburn, who is also the lord of the manor; and its rateable value is £19,116 10s.; its area is 308 acres. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 4,239; in 1811, 4,264; in 1821, 4,924; in 1831, 6,051; in 1841, 7,742; and in 1851, 10,109. This increase of population is attributed to the progress of the coal trade. The township of Monkwearmouth Shore is of comparatively modern date, and owes its present importance to its shipbuilding yards, and the increasing commerce upon the river.—For directory, &c., see Sunderland.

FULWELL township contains 807 acres, and its rateable value is £1,827 7s. 4d. The population in 1801 was 85; in 1811, 145; in 1821, 115; in 1831, 158; in 1841, 134; and in 1851, 169 souls. The township is held by lease under the church of Durham. Here are extensive lime kilns, the property of Sir Hedworth Williamson, Bart. In 1759, while some workmen were removing a bank of earth at Fulwell Hill, they found a gigantic skeleton of a human body, which measured nine feet six inches in length, and had near its right hand two Roman coins.

The Village of Fulwell is one-and-a-quarter miles north-north-east of Sunderland.

PAINSHAW DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish, formed by an order in council, dated May 15th, 1835, comprises the townships of Biddick (South), Bourn Moor, Offerton, and Painslaw or Penshaw, which formerly constituted a chapelry in the parish of Houghton-le-Spring.

BIDDICK (SOUTH) township contains 343 acres, and its rateable value is £833. The population in 1801 was 490; in 1811, 141; in 1821, 167; in 1831, 199; in 1841, 74; and in 1851, 38 souls. At the time of the compilation of the Boldon Book, "the villains of South Bedic held their vill to farm, and paid five shillings, and provided 160 men to mow in harvest, and 36 carts to lead (the lord's) corn at Hooton." In 1335, it was held by the Colley family; but was soon afterwards divided, and we find the Daldens and Burnynghills named as possessors. It subsequently became the property of the Bowes family, by whom it was sold to the Lambtons, and is now held by the Earl of Durham and the Marchioness of Londonderry; the former of whom is lord of the manor.

The Village of South Biddick occupies a low, sequestered situation, near the river Wear, about four miles north-east by east of Chester-le-Street; and is said to have been formerly the haunt of banditti, who set the authorities of the time at defiance. It was here the unfortunate James Drummond, commonly called the Duke of Perth, sought refuge after the rebellion of 1745, under the protection of Nicholas Lambton, Esq., of South Biddick, where he lived in obscurity and concealment till his death in 1782.

Directory. — Mr. Henry Morton, land agent and principal for the Earl of Durham, Biddick Hall; Mr. Henry Thomas Morton, land agent to the Earl of Durham, Biddick Hall; John Calvert, principal clerk, Colliery Office, Biddick; John Dodds, lampblack manufacturer, South Howden House, Waggon Hill; and John Dodds, farmer, Waggon Hill.

BOURN MOOR township is principally the property of the Earl of Durham, who is also lord of the manor. Its area is 500 acres, and its rateable value £1,305. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 889; in 1811, 955; in 1821, 1,139; in 1831, 938; in 1841, 891; and in 1851, 891. Here is a colliery, the property of the Earl of Durham; extensive coke ovens, worked by James Morrison, Esq., of Roker, Sunderland, who obtained two prize medals at the London Exhibition; a brick and tile works and a corn mill, worked by Mr. John Donnison. This township, formerly known as Biddick Fence, was separated from Biddick about ninety years ago, probably on account of the population attached to the collieries. Sir George Bowes granted Biddick Fence to his brother, Robert Bowes, about the year 1629. William Bowes sold the estate, about 1680, to Henry Lambton, Esq., from whom it has descended to its present proprietor.

The Hamlet of Bourn Moor is two miles north-by-west of Houghton-le-Spring. New Lambton is also a hamlet in this township, where there are places of worship belonging to the Wesleyans and the Wesleyan Association.

Wapping is another hamlet, in which there is a chapel, used alternately by the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists. There is also an endowed school, erected by the Earl of Durham, in 1844, for the use of the children of his tenantry and workpeople. It is attended by about eighty children: James Smith, teacher.

OFFERTON township comprises an area of 809 acres, and its rateable value is £1,708. Its population in 1801 was 77; in 1811, 175; in 1821, 198; in 1831, 190; in 1841, 200; and in 1851, 218 souls. The Earl of Durham is principal landowner and possessor of the manorial rights and privileges. This is one of the places given by Athelstan to the see of Durham, as an appendage to the village of South Wearmouth. The Denums are recorded as proprietors here at an early period, and from them it appears to have passed to the Strothers. The Fenwicks, Loreynes, Lilburnes, Middletons, Whartons, and Temples, also occur as landowners at various periods.

PAINSHAW, OR PENSHAW township, contains 1,066 acres, and its rateable value is £4,304 5s. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 1,399; in 1811, 2,275; in 1821, 2,090; in 1831, 2,539; in 1841, 1,912; and in 1851, 2,120. Here is a quarry, producing freestone of a superior quality, which is sent to all parts of the kingdom for the construction of piers, harbours, and bridges. A portion of the stone used in the erection of London Bridge, was brought from this place; Seaham Harbour docks are entirely built of this stone; as is also the masonry of the High Level bridge at Newcastle-on-Tyne; the Victoria Railway bridge, on the North-Eastern Railway, across the Painshaw valley; a portion of the Sunderland docks, and Sunderland pier. There is also an iron works, and a fire-brick manufactory, which, with the collieries in the neighbourhood, give employment to the majority of the inhabitants. This township was anciently held by the Daldens, except a portion called Bernewell, which was held immediately under the see of Durham. In 1426 Robert Karlele was found to hold "the manor of Bernewell, the mill, and mill pond, on a rivulet, called Ellyngburne, near Heryngton, under the name of two hundred and seventy-four acres and a half of land, lying next to Bedykfields, of cultivated land, by homage, fealty, and the service of providing one man with two greyhounds, to attend the bishop's great chase, and £4 to the exchequer, and the manor is worth nothing beyond the service. He holds the vill of Pencher of the heirs of Jordan de Escowland, together with the services of the free tenants, and 20s. rent from free tenements, except three messuages, &c., which Alice de Karlele, mother of the same Robert, holds in dower for term of life." From the Karleles, the manor was transferred by marriage to the Thirkelds, and from them to the Amcoats. The principal landowners at present are the Marchioness of Londonderry, John Eden, Esq., George Winter, Esq., and the Earl of Durham; the latter is lord of the manor.

The Village of Painshaw is about three miles north-by-east of Houghton-le-Spring. On the top of a lofty eminence, called Painshaw Hill, is a Grecian monument, erected to the memory of the late Right Hon. John Lambton, Earl of Durham, the foundation-stone of which was laid on the 28th August, 1854, by the Earl of Zetland. The length of the monument is 100 feet, the breadth 53, and it is 70 feet high. It is supported by eighteen columns, each of which is six feet six inches in diameter, and thirty-four feet high; and from its conspicuous and elevated position, it may be seen in every direction. The stone was presented by the late Marquis of Londonderry, from his quarry in this township. The estimated cost of the erection was about £6,000. Messrs.

John and Benjamin Green, of Newcastle, were the architects; and Messrs. Thomas Pratt and Son, of Sunderland, the builders.

The Church is a plain stone edifice, erected in 1746, and consists of nave and chancel; the windows in the latter are of stained glass, bearing representations of the four Evangelists, and were presented by the present rector. The living is a rectory, in the gift of the Bishop of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. James Waters.

Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, in which the Rev. John Wesley is stated to have preached. It is the oldest Wesleyan chapel in the neighbourhood, and is attended by the Houghton ministers.

Painshaw Endowed School for Boys and Girls, was erected by the late Marquis of Londonderry, in 1847; and is now supported by the marchioness, for the promotion of the moral and religious education of the children of her workmen, who are taught free, but a charge of one penny per week is made for books, &c. The average number of scholars is about 200. James O. Clazey and Isabella Monkhouse, teachers.

Painshaw Reading Society, formerly attached to the church, but now supported by voluntary contributions, contains about 400 volumes, and is supplied with the leading papers and periodicals. The subscription is 1s. per quarter. Mr. George Elliott, president; Mr. Ralph Elliott, vice-president and treasurer; Mr. William Dawson, secretary; and James O. Clazey, librarian.

Cox Green is a hamlet, partly in this township and partly in that of West Herrington, about five miles west of Sunderland.

Shiney Row is a colliery village in this township, two miles west-by-north of Houghton-le-Spring. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, a handsome structure, in the early English style, erected in 1852, at a cost of £320, which sum was bequeathed by the Allen family, who resided at the village. There is also a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Association.

ST. THOMAS' CHAPELRY DISTRICT.

The chapelry district of St. Thomas was formed from the parish of Bishopwearmouth, by an order in council, 23rd May, 1844. It will be found described in our account of Sunderland.

SEAHAM PARISH.

This parish, which includes the townships of Seaham, and Seaton and Slingley, is bounded on the north by the townships of Ryhope and Burdon, in the parish of Bishopwearmouth; on the west and south-west by Eppleton and Wardenlaw, in the parish of Houghton-le-Spring; on the south, by Dalton-le-Dale; and on the east, by the German Ocean.

SEAHAM township comprises 1,706 acres, and its rateable value is £2,920. Its population in 1801 was 115; in 1811, 121; in 1821, 103; in 1831, 130; in 1841, 153; and in 1851, in consequence of a railroad and other works in the township, it had increased to 729 souls. Seaham was included in King Athelstan's grant to the shrine of St. Cuthbert; but, in the course of three centuries, it had, with Seaton and Slingley, become a freehold manor, the property of two heiresses, Matilda and Hawysia. The former intermarried with Yeland, and the latter with Hadham, between whose descendants some disputes, respecting the division of the property, seem to have existed, but which were terminated in 1295, by a solemn deed executed in the parish church. Before 1408, Yeland's moiety had become vested in the family of Dalden; it was afterwards transferred by marriage to the Bromfletes, and from them to the family of Bowes, by whom it was sold to the Milbankes. The moieties of Seaham and Seaton, held by the Hadhams, continued in that family till the failure of male issue, at the commencement of the sixteenth century, when it passed by marriage to the Bamfords and Blaykestons. The moiety of Seaham was afterwards held by the Swinburnes, of Nafferton, in Northumberland. The present landowners are the Marchioness of Londonderry, who is also the possessor of the manorial rights, John Gregson, Esq., and Mr. John Brough.

The Village of Seaham is pleasantly situated near the German Ocean, about five miles south of Sunderland.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a plain stone structure, consisting of nave and chancel, with square tower, and contains about 150 sittings, the whole of which are free. The parish register commences in 1646. From the earliest period of the records, the advowson appears to have been attached to the manor, and to have been held alternately by the families of Hadham and Yeland. In 1475, the rectory was annexed to the Abbey of Coverham, in Yorkshire; and after the dissolution, the patronage became vested in the crown. The living is now a vicarage, in the patronage of the Marchioness of Londonderry, valued in the Liber Regis at £5 0s. 5d.; gross income, £688. Vicar, the Rev. R. H. Baxter, M.A.

New Seaham is a colliery village in this township, the inhabitants of which are chiefly engaged in the neighbouring mines. A new church is in course of erection here, the foundation stone of which was laid by the Marchioness of Londonderry on the 13th August, 1855. The situation of the structure is pleasant in itself, and highly convenient with reference to its intended purpose. The site selected for it is part of a piece of fine, dry pasture land on the north side of the road way connecting New and Old Seaham, and directly opposite the colliery there. It will be an edifice in the decorated style, with nave, chancel, and side aisles, and adapted to contain between 400 and 500 sittings, the whole of which will be free and unappropriated. The architect is P. C. Hardwicke, Esq., London, and the builder Mr. Robert Robson, of Durham. The Primitive Methodists have places of worship here, and at Old Seaham Colliery.

Seaham Harbour Water Works are situated in this township, and were opened in 1853, the cost of construction being about £3,700. They are the property of a private company. The water lies at a depth of thirty-five fathoms, and is pumped up by an engine of twenty horse power. Seaham Hall, Old Seaham, and Seaton collieries are supplied with water from these works, as is also Seaham Harbour, with its iron works, bottle works, &c. Robert Wright, Esq., chairman; Robert Thorman, Esq., secretary; John Maddison, engineer.

Seaham Hall, one of the seats of the Marchioness of Londonderry, is seated in richly wooded and picturesque grounds, not far from the parish church.

Charities.—In the parliamentary returns of 1786, it is stated that William Martin, in 1696, bequeathed £5 to the poor, and that Thomas Brice, in 1762, bequeathed the like sum for the same purpose, both of which were then vested in the overseers. The sum of 10s., as the interest of these sums, is distributed annually amongst the labouring poor.

SEATON AND SLINGLEY township is principally the property of John Gregson, Esq., Messrs. Thomas Brough and Son, Thomas Thompson, Esq., Ralph Carr, Esq., and Messrs. Blythe and Sharp. It contains 1,373 acres, and its rateable value is £1,701 9s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 96; in 1811, 126; in 1821, 95; in 1831, 134; in 1841, 175; and in 1851, 200 souls. In ancient times Seaton seems to have formed but one manor with Seaham; half of each vill being allotted to the families of Yeland and Hadham, under the division confirmed in 1295. Slingley, or, as it was originally called, Slinglew, is a hid or law to the south-west of Seaton; and has been successively the property of the Swinburnes, the Widdringtons, the Collingwoods, and the Dales.

The Village of Seaton is pleasantly situated, about a mile and a half to the west of Seaham, and six miles south-by-west of Sunderland.

SEAHAM HARBOUR PARISH.

This parish, which includes the township of Dawdon, was separated from the parish of Dalton-le-Dale by an order in council, dated August 23rd, 1843, and made into a distinct parish in 1845.

DAWDON township comprises an area of 987 acres, which is principally the property of the Marchioness of Londonderry, who also holds the manorial rights. The population in 1801 was 22; in 1811, 27; in 1821, 35; in 1831, in consequence of the construction of a new harbour, it had increased to 1,022; in 1841, 2,017; and in 1851, 3,638 souls. Dawdon, formerly called Dalden, was anciently the seat of the baronial family of Escolland, who probably assumed the local name; for so early as Bishop Hatfield's time, William de Dalden held the manor of the Lord de Percy, by homage, fealty, and a knight's fee, for which the Lord Percy made suit at the bishop's county court every fortnight. Dawdon, with the manor of Homildon, and half of those of Seaham, Hetton, and Biddic-Waterville, centered in the family of Bowes, by the marriage of Matilda, daughter of Robert de Dalden, with Sir William Bowes, Knt., about 1375; and of Sir Robert Bowes, their son, with Joan, daughter of Sir Robert Conyers, of Ormesby, and heiress of her mother, Aline, widow of William de Dalden. The Bowes family long continued possessors of Dawdon, which at length passed by marriage to the Blakistons and Collingwoods, and afterwards to the Milbankes, coming ultimately to the Londonderry family.

SEAHAM HARBOUR is a rising and flourishing seaport, pleasantly situated on the margin of the German Ocean, where, twenty-six years ago there was not a house or a path; and when it was proposed to create a port at the place the project was treated as visionary and absurd. "In 1820," says Mackenzie, "the late Sir Ralph Noel applied to William Chapman, Esq., C.E., on the subject of making a coal port by extending certain of the inlets in the high lands on the coast of the parish of Dalton-le-Dale, and sheltering them by piers on the rocks without. A plan of a small harbour was accordingly drawn by that gentleman, which attracted the attention of the Marquis of Londonderry, who had, in the interim, purchased the estates of Sir Ralph Noel. The design was viewed by that nobleman in so favourable a light, that he desired Mr. Chapman to devise a more extensive plan; and the work, in a short time, proceeded with a spirit and industry almost unparalleled. The piers being the first part sheltered, their enlargement was commenced in September, 1828. The limestone rock dug out of them was converted into lime, and used for the filling of the piers, and the formation of a fore-shore on the north, which is defended by a sloping pavement and a parapet. The South Quay and jetties were also formed, leaving the passage into this Inner Harbour of 32 feet, closed by a falling gate, retaining the water within a few feet of the level of neap tides." The foundation stones of the harbour and town of Seaham were laid on the 28th November, 1828, the former by the late Marquis of Londonderry, and the latter by Viscount Seaham; and on the 25th July, 1831, the first cargo of coals was shipped in a fine brig, called the Lord Seaham. The docks here are spacious and well constructed; and it is the intention of the Marchioness of Londonderry to erect additional ones, those at present existing being scarcely adequate to afford accommodation for the shipping plying between the port and the principal coal markets. Glass, earthenware, &c., are also shipped for various places. There is a light-house for the convenience of vessels approaching the port. Seaham Harbour is connected by a railway with the principal collieries of the district; there is also a passenger line, constructed at the sole expense of the Marchioness of Londonderry, which has been lately opened to Sunderland, — it is called the Londonderry, Seaham, and Sunderland Railway. Here are Iron Works, commenced by Robert Wright, Esq., in 1844, as an iron foundry; but the business has since been much extended, and now embraces the manufacture of anchors, chain cables, and forge iron of every description. A large number of mechanics and other workmen are engaged in this establishment. There are also bottle works, which afford employment to a number of men and boys. The gas works are situated in Dawdon Dean, on the north side of the town, and were established in 1841, by Mr. H. W. Smith, chemist, who is the proprietor. They include two gasometers, each of which is capable of containing about 30,000 cubic feet of gas. The public and private buildings, shops, &c., of the town, with Seaham Hall, the collieries, &c., are supplied with gas from these works at 3s. 4d. per 1,000 cubic feet; and manufacturers using large quantities, are supplied at 2s. 6d. per 1,000. It is proposed by the marchioness to remove the works from their present position, and to occupy their site with villa residences. The water works are situated in the township of Old Seaham, (see page 641).

The Church, dedicated to St. John, is a neat structure, in the Gothic style, and consists of nave and chancel, with square tower. It was erected by subscription in 1840, at a cost of about £1,162 4s. 4d., and contains 550 sittings, of which 280 are free and unappropriated. The chancel window is of three lights, and contains representations of our Saviour, St. John the Evangelist, and St. John the Baptist in stained glass. The windows of the north and south sides are also of stained glass, emblazoned with the various arms of the Londonderry family. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Marchioness of Londonderry, and incumbency of the Rev. Angus Bethune, M.A.

The Congregational, or Independent Chapel, situated in Back-terrace, was formerly used as a warehouse, but is now, and has been for some time, rented by the congregation at £10 a year. This body is, however, erecting a handsome Gothic chapel in Tempest-place, on a site given by the Marchioness of Londonderry, at a moderate annual rent. The new chapel will accommodate 300 persons, and will have a Sunday-school attached; the cost of erection is estimated at £1,000. Rev. John Harland, minister.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, a plain building, in Tempest-place, was erected in 1833, at a cost of £300. The Wesleyan Association Chapel is in Church-street, and was built in 1839, at an expense of about £300. The ground floor is let off in tenements. The Primitive Methodist Chapel, situated in Tempest-street, is a stone building, erected in 1850, at a cost of £400.

St. John's National School, a handsome Gothic building of hewn stone, situated in Church-street, was erected in 1818, at an expense of £850, and is attended by about 140 boys and 172 girls. John Hetherington, master; William Good, assistant master; and Jane Petrie, mistress.

The Londonderry Literary and Scientific Institute, Tempest-place, is a handsome building of hewn stone, in the Grecian style, with portico of four fluted columns in front, erected at a cost of about £1,500, which was raised partly by subscription, and partly by the proceeds of a bazaar held at Seaham Hall; the late Marquis of Londonderry being the principal promoter and contributor. The building comprises a commodious hall, capable of containing about 400 persons; a reading-room, well supplied with the various papers and periodicals; and a library of about 400 volumes. The Marchioness of Londonderry gives the use of the building free,—the money received on account of lectures, &c., being placed to the credit of the institute. Patroness, the Marchioness of Londonderry; chairman, Rev. A. Bethune, M.A.; secretary, Mr. David Atkinson; librarian, John Rogerson.

Lady Londonderry's Infirmary, situated in Tempest-place, is a handsome structure, in the Gothic style, erected in 1844, at a cost of £800, and will accommodate thirteen patients. The want of such an institution, among a population, surrounded by railways, collieries, &c., leading a life of risk and danger, where accidents are of common occurrence, is evident; and it is in contemplation to enlarge the building, and thus increase the usefulness of the establishment as soon as possible. By the rules of the institution, every subscriber of five shillings is allowed to recommend one out-patient annually; subscribers of half a guinea, two out-patients; subscribers of one guinea, four out-patients or one in-patient; and subscribers of a larger amount, to recommend a greater number in the same proportion. Patroness, the Marchioness of Londonderry; visiting physician, W. S. Burn, M.D.; visiting surgeons, Edward Maling and Reginald Orton; resident surgeon, T. C. Beatty; matron, Mrs. Ann Stratford; treasurer, Mr. H. W. Smith.

The Baths are pleasantly situated in Dawdon Dean, and were established in 1834, by Mr. Thomas Prosser, who sold them to Mrs. Patrick, of Durham, from whom they were purchased by the late owner of Seaham, in 1840. As the establishment is on rather a limited scale, the marchioness purposes to erect additional baths and washhouses, at the east end of the town; and it is also her intention to have a county-court erected here, which is also to serve as a magistrates' sitting-room.

SOUTHWICK DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish, which includes the townships of Hylton and Southwick, formerly included in the parish of Monkwearmouth, was formed in 1845, and contains a population of 4,000 souls.

HYLTON township is principally the property of John Bowes, Esq., Anthony Ettrick, Esq., George Hudson, Esq., and several small copyholders. It comprises an area of 2,670 acres. The population in 1801 was 812; in 1811, 363; in 1821, 820; in 1831, 420; in 1841, 550; and in 1851, 546 souls. Shipbuilding is extensively carried on in this township.

The Village of Hylton is about three miles west-north-west of Sunderland, and contains chapels belonging to the Wesleyans, the Wesleyan Association, and the Primitive Methodists. Here is also a parochial school, attended by about 40 children, and in which divine service is sometimes performed.

Hylton Castle, the seat of the Hylton family from the days of King Athelstan till 1746, is about three miles west of Sunderland. With its original form or extent we are unacquainted, it having undergone several considerable alterations. Its present form is that of an oblong square; the centre part is evidently the most ancient; the wings are of modern constructure; its general appearance is that of a fortified mansion. The front is old and very curious, with four projecting square towers, each surmounted by octagonal battlements. From tower to tower, also extend hanging battlements; both the towers and recesses are machicolated; over the door there is a battlement, supported by an elliptic arch with a cusped edge; and the battlements on each arch have been finished by some figures, which are now, in a great degree, broken off. The turret battlements are also surmounted with martial figures in stone, in various attitudes. This front bears evidence of great antiquity; and, from its style and attributes, may be ascribed to the reign of Richard II. The centre is occupied by several shields of arms, among which are those of Neville, Skirlaw, Percy and Louvaine, Brabant, Hilton, Vipont, Lumley, Graystoke, Euse, Fitzrandal, Washington, Ogle, Conyers, and others. On the turrets are several shields, among which are those of Surtees and Bowes. The east front is of a similar character; just above the castle stands, on a high terrace, the chapel, in a state of ruinous decay. It was once noted for its elegance and ornaments; but its beauty has given way to destruction. The entire edifice is now in a state of great dilapidation. Hutchinson gives us the following account of the Hylton family:—"Three hundred years before the conquest, even in the reign of King Athelstan, one of the Saxon monarchs, the family of Hyltons, were settled in England in great reputation, as appears by a certain inscription at Hartlepool. That upon the coming over of William the Conqueror, Lancelot de Hylton, with his two sons, Henry and Robert, espoused his cause, and joined him; but that Lancelot was slain at Faversham, in Kent. That to the elder son, Henry, the conqueror gave a large tract of land on the banks of the river Were, not far from Weresmouth, as a reward for his own and his father's valour. That this Henry built Hylton Castle in 1072; was one of the deputies that treated with the Conqueror concerning the four northern counties; and in the service of that prince was slain in Normandy. That in the reign of Edward III., John Hylton, who sent four of his sons into the wars of France, under the command of the Black Prince, was first created Baron of Hylton Castle, for his gallant defence of it against the Scots' incursions. That this peerage continued in the family for seven successions, till at last it was forfeited on account of some unguarded words, whereof the then Bishop of Durham gave the court information, which William, the seventh, and last baron spoke against the queen, and her favourite, De La Pole. That upon the death of this William, which was thought to have been violent, the crown seized upon the estate, gave it to the informing bishop, who held it for some time to the utter exclusion of the rightful heir. That, in process of time, however, Lancelot, the grandson of the aforesaid William, was restored to his castle, and part of his estate; no more of it, indeed, than what the bishop thought fit to allow him, under this hard condition, that he and his heirs for ever should hold the moiety that was given them under certain rents and services to the see of Durham, and have the title of baron, but not barons of the bishoprick, annexed to their inheritance; and in that condition it has continued ever since. In the pedigree of the Hyltons, there are several names remarkable for their learning and piety, but almost innumerable of those highly renowned for their martial deeds. War seems to have been the pleasure, genius, and recreation of the Hyltons, that one was slain at Faversham, in Kent; one in Normandy; one at Mentz, in France; three in the Holy Wars, under Richard I.; one in the same, under Edward I.; three at the battle of Bordeaux, under the Black Prince; one at Agincourt; two at Berwick-upon-Tweed, against the Scots; two at the battle of St. Albans; five at Market Bosworth; and four at Flodden Field." This great and ancient family, at one time, possessed the manors of Hylton, Barmston, Grindon, Ford, Clowcroft, North Biddic, Great Usworth, and Follensley, in the county of Durham; Carnaby and Warham Percy, in the county of York; Elryngton and Woodhall, in Northumberland; Alston Moor, in Northumberland and Cumberland; with the advowsons of Thyckhalgh, and Monkwearmouth. "After a series of twenty descents," says a recent writer, "stretching through five centuries, this distinguished family received a blow from the singular act of its then possessor, Henry Hylton, who, having conceived some grievous offence against his family, deserted the seat of his ancestors, and lived in obscure retirement, first, at the house of a remote kinsman, at Billingham, in Sussex, and afterwards at Mitchel Grove, where he died. He bequeathed, in 1641, the whole of his estate, for ninety-nine years, to the city of London, setting aside the natural lives for that time. This led to active litigation. The lawyers were busy tearing out the vitals of the estate, when out burst the civil wars, and completed what they would no doubt have done as effectually if left to themselves, and their natural genius for reducing overgrown estates. From that time, the barons of Hylton sank lower and lower, till the last of the family, a widow and her daughter, lived on the Windmill hill, Gateshead; the husband and father—the last of the direct Hyltons—having been, it is supposed, a woollen draper."

Southwick township, which comprises an area of 1,018 acres, is principally the property of the dean and chapter of Durham. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 554; in 1811, 641; in 1821, 1,004; in 1831, 1,801; in 1841, 1,912; and in 1851, 2,721. This increase of population is attributed to the increase of quarries and limekilns in this township. Here are extensive shipbuilding yards, glass works, earthenware manufactories, &c., which afford employment to the majority of the inhabitants. Southwick was anciently held by a family bearing the local name, from whom it passed to the Hedworths, who continued its possessors till 1630, when they sold it to the Greys, of Lumley.

The Village of Southwick is about one-and-a-quarter mile north-west of Sunderland. It stretches along the heights above the Wear, is extremely pleasant, and commands a fine view of the port and German Ocean.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a handsome structure, in the early English style, erected in 1845, and contains 600 sittings, 400 of which are free and unappropriated. The living, which is worth about £320, is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. Lewis Morgan, M.A., who was instituted in 1847.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have places of worship here.

The National School was erected in 1886 upon a site given by Mrs. Collins. The funds for the building were derived from subscriptions, and from donations from the Parliamentary Funds for Promoting Education, the National Society, the Diocesan Society, and the trustees of Bishop Barrington. There are apartments for boys and girls, and the school will accommodate about 240 children; average attendance, 150. William Walker and Elizabeth Hill, teachers.

THE TOWN, PORT, AND BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

The town of Sunderland is situated on the river Wear, 272 miles north-by-west from London, 135 south-east from Edinburgh, 12 east-by-south from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and 13 north-east from Durham. It includes the whole of the parish of Sunderland, and a portion of that of Bishopwearmouth on the south side of the river Wear, with a portion of the parish of Monkwearmouth on the north side; the junction being effected by a magnificent iron bridge of one stupendous arch, thus forming one large, populous, and commercial town, the whole of which is generally denominated Sunderland. The town is well situated for shipping, on the banks of the Wear, at its confluence with the sea; and its principal street is a spacious and noble one, upwards of a mile in length, with a gentle ascent from the vicinity of the river, where it is joined by numerous narrow lanes, leading down to the shipping staiths and quays. Many of the shops in this street are got up in the first style of fashion, and there are numerous hotels in it of a superior description. Elegant new streets have been struck off at either side, especially towards the middle of its ascent, and towards the bridge. Some of these streets, with their handsome shops, would stand comparison with any street in the best part of Newcastle, or even in Edinburgh, the acknowledged "city of palaces." In the older and more extensive parts of the town, however, the streets, or rather the lanes, are of a very different description, most of them being crowded, though the scene of some of the most thriving traffic of the port. There are some good streets of considerable length, as well as many narrow ones, on the south side of the principal street, and also opening into it. A number of these, however, were removed some years ago, and a splendid market-house, with covered arcades, erected for the accommodation of the butchers, and the sale of butter, eggs, vegetables, &c. The streets are in general well paved, and, together with the shops and markets, lighted with gas.

ANNALS.—Monkwearmouth.—Of the places which now form the town of Sunderland, the highest antiquity must be ascribed to Monkwearmouth, whose origin is derived from the foundation of a monastery at the mouth of the Wear, in the reign of Oswald, King of Northumbria, and which, according to Bede, was placed under the superintendence of St. Bega, better known as St. Bees, from the monastery built by her, at the place named after her, near Copeland Forest, Cumberland. This lady, shortly afterwards, founded another monastery at Hartlepool, and on her removal thither, she was succeeded in the government of the monastery of Wearmouth by St. Hilda, "whose family, virtue, and talents, reflected a brighter lustre on the institute." This primitive establishment was most probably absorbed in the more splendid foundation of Bennet Biscop, who, about the year 674, obtained a grant of land from King Egfrid, on which he built the great abbey of St. Peter. This spacious edifice, which was constructed after the Roman manner, was roofed, and mass was celebrated in it within a year after the laying of the foundations; and the windows are said to have been glazed with the first glass manufactured in this country, the founder having brought glass makers from France with him for that purpose. Bennet enriched the abbey with an immense collection of books in every department of learning, and with some precious relics of the apostles and martyrs, together with a number of interesting paintings of sacred subjects. Bennet's pious zeal did not pass unnoticed by Egfrid, who increased the grant of lands which had been made to the monastery, from seventy to one hundred hides, and by this means enabled the founder to erect another monastery at Jarrow, in 682. The following year, "seventeen monks, with the holy priest Ceolfrid at their head, were transferred to the new establishment, which formed a joint institution with the mother house of Wearmouth,—the two monasteries containing no less than six hundred monks." In the monastery of Wearmouth, the Venerable Bede, "the morning star of English literature," spent a great portion of his life. (See Jarrow.) The monastery was destroyed by the Danes, under Ingvar and Hubba, in 786, but appears to have been shortly afterwards rebuilt, though by whom or in what manner this restoration was effected, we are not informed. It was again demolished by Malcolm, King of Scotland, in 1070. Five years after this devastation, the abbey was re-edified, and several of the monks returned to it from Jarrow, with Aldwin as their superior, to whom Bishop Walcher gave the vill of North Wearmouth. This donation was increased by Bishop de Carileph, who, in 1082, added the adjoining vill of Southwick; he also confirmed the grant which the monastery had received from his predecessor, and, in the following year, translated the monks to Durham, and Wearmouth became a cell for three or four monks only, subordinate to the priory of that city. At the dissolution it was resigned by Prior Claxton, who had reserved for his maintenance the cell at Wearmouth, with the tithes of Southwick. At this period the whole yearly revenues did not amount to more than £26 9s. 9d. Nothing now remains of the once splendid monastery of Wearmouth except the tower of the parish church, which is supposed to be a portion of the ancient building.

Bishopwearmouth.—History is silent with regard to Bishopwearmouth till about the year 930, when King Athelstan, in the course of an expedition against Constantine, King of Scotland, gave or restored Bishopwearmouth to the see of Durham. Its limits were at that time more extensive than at present; for in the grant of the vill of South Wearmouth were included Weston, Offerton, and Silksworth, together with the two Ryhopes, Burdon, Seaham, Seaton, Dalton, Dalden, and Hesilden, which are stated to have been "wrested from the church by the malignity of evil men." In Boldon Book, we find Wearmouth and Tunstall mentioned together. "In Wermouth and Tunstall are twenty-two tenants in villenage; and six cottagers, whose work, rent, and services are like those of Boldon. The carpenter, who is aged, holds twelve acres for life, for making carts and arrows. The smith has twelve acres for the iron work of the carts, and finds his own coal. The pay and services of the punder are the same as the punder of Boldon. The two vills pay 20s. cornage, and provide two milch cows. The demesne is farmed with a stock of twenty draught oxen, two harrows, and 300 sheep. The rent, including the mill, is twenty pounds; the fisheries pay six pounds, and the borough of Weremouthe twenty shillings." In Hatfield's Survey we find "Thomas Menvill occupies a certain place called Hynden for the mooring of vessels, and pays 2s. John Hobson holds ten acres of the demesne, and pays 18s. 4d. William Gray and sixteen other tenants, hold 140 acres, under certain rents, in proportion to the tenure; and Robert Carter holds one acre called Foreland, and pays 2s." Besides these, we have bond tenants, cottagers, and holders of exchequer lands specified; and we find that during the period which had elapsed between the two surveys, many of the personal services had been commuted for moneyed rents; these, in a few centuries were rendered certain and immutable by custom. In Queen Elizabeth's reign a survey was made; but in it no notice is taken of tenants in bond or villenage, and at present nearly the whole vill of Bishopwearmouth is held by copy of court roll under the bishop's manor of Houghton-le-Spring. Until 1649, the lands in the vicinity of Bishopwearmouth appear to have been undivided and of small value, but in that year the customary tenants were induced to improve their respective farms, on account of Sunderland having been "just raised from obscurity by its flourishing coal trade, and enriched every day thereby:" the lands were consequently set out by distinct boundaries.

Sunderland.—The port and borough of Sunderland, not being mentioned by either Camden or Leland, is supposed by many to have been but an insignificant place at the periods when these celebrated writers visited this part of the country; but be that as it may, the harbour at the mouth of the Wear, Wiranmuthæ, Sunderlande, or Ostium Vedra, seems to have been well known and much frequented during the Anglo-Saxon period, both on account of its maritime conveniences, and of the celebrated monastery which occupied its northern bank. Sunderland is supposed by Mr. Brown to have risen simultaneously with the monastery of Wearmouth, and that its name originated in the relation in which it stood to its monastic patron, viz., that of being land sundered, or separated from the monastery, but within its jurisdiction. The same gentleman says, "We date the rise of the town of Sunderland, A.D. 692; and our conjecture as to its origin is, that when Benedict introduced masons, glassmakers, and other artisans from abroad, for the purpose of building and beautifying the monastery, he settled them, not upon the monastic lands on the north bank of the river, but, upon land appropriated to them on the south bank." And he adds, "Sunderland was, in all probability, a well populated town in the beginning of the eighth century."

The charter of Bishop Pudsey, granted about the close of the twelfth century, is the first authentic notice upon record of the existence of the port or borough of South Wearmouth as a place of maritime consequence and resort. This document, which is addressed "to the prior, archdeacons, barons, and to all men throughout his episcopate, both French and English," gives to the inhabitants similar free customs and liberties as those enjoyed by the burgesses of Newcastle. "That it is lawful for them to judge, in a court of law, peasants or other inhabitants, without the liberty of their superior, if they be indebted to them; unless, perhaps, they may have been placed there by the bishop or sheriff, or seneschal, for some matter of the bishop's own. If a burgess accredit anything to a villain within the borough, and if he deny the debt, it shall be settled within the borough. However, a burgess must not, on any occasion, harass a villain by unlawful speech. Pleas arising within the borough, except those of the crown, shall be determined there. If any burgess be accused within the borough, he must comply, unless he makes his escape into another borough, where he shall be retained or placed in security; but if the court of the same borough do not fail in their duty, and if the plea does not pertain to the crown, he shall not be called upon to answer without an appointed day, unless it has formerly been fixed by an unwise council in law. If a ship touch at the Wear, and is about to depart, any burgess may purchase whatever merchandise he wishes from that ship, if anyone be willing to sell to him; and if a dispute arise between the burgess and the merchant, they must settle it within the third influx of the tide. Merchandise, being brought into the borough by sea, ought to be landed, except salt and herrings, which may be sold in the ships, or in the borough, at the will of the seller. Should any one hold land within the borough for one year and one day without accusation, while the claimant has been within the realm, and not under age, if then accused, he ought not to give it up. If a burgess has his son boarded in his own house, the son may enjoy the same liberties as his father. If a villain come to live in the borough, and hold land and tenements for one year and one day, without accusation, by desire of his landlord, he may remain to any time in the borough as a burgess. It is lawful for a burgess to sell his lands and go where he pleases, unless his lands be under a bond. If a burgess be complained against, in a matter where battle ought to be waged, by a villain or free inhabitant, he may defend himself by the civil law or by thirty-six men, unless the value in suit be one hundred pounds, or the crime imputed to him ought to be tried by battle. A burgess ought not to fight against a villain if he should force him, unless before the accusation he should have forfeited his office as a burgess. Blodwite,* merchet,† heriot,‡ nor stengesdui,§ ought not to exist in the borough. It is lawful for any burgess to have his oven and handmill, saving the right of the lord bishop. If anyone fall into forfeiture to the superior, touching bread or beer, the superior alone can allow him to escape; if he fall the second time, he may allow him to escape; but if he fall the third time, let justice be administered to him by the common consent of the burgesses. A burgess may bring in his corn from the country when he pleases, except at a time of prohibition or embargo. A burgess may give or sell his land to whom he pleases, without the voice or consent of his heir, if he bought it with his own money. Every burgess is at liberty to buy timber and firewood equally with the burgesses of Durham. They may enjoy their common pasturage as was originally granted to them and which we have caused to be perambulated. We shall hold the same customs arising from fish being sold at the Wear, as Robert de Brus held from his people of Hartlepool. We will, therefore, and more firmly determine, that they have and hold the before-mentioned customs and privileges, freely, quietly and honourably from us and our successors." We have given this charter at full length, as it was well calculated to foster the early commerce of the port, by releasing the burgesses from several of the most oppressive laws of the feudal system; by facilitating the transfer of property, providing for the speedy administration of justice, and by affording protection to every one who settled within the borough.

† A payment made by a villain to his lord for liberty to give his daughter in marriage.

‡ A tribute or fine payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner, landowner, or vassal.

§ A fine inflicted for an assault committed with a stick or like instrument.

From Boldon Book we learn that "Sunderland was let to farm, and paid a hundred marks; and that Roger de Andri paid one mark for his mill pool, which was established within the bounds of Sunderland." In 1358, Bishop Hatfield leased the borough of Sunderland, with the fisheries and Wotton-Yare to Richard Hedworth, of Southwick, for twenty years, under a rent of £20 per annum. At the time of the survey made by the same bishop, Thomas Menvill held the borough of Sunderland, with the free-rents of the borough, the fisheries in the river Wear, the borough court, tolls, and stallage, with eight yares belonging to the bishop, eight shillings rent from the Prior of Durham for Ebyare, and eight shillings rent from John Hedworth for a yare called Owen's-yare, and for the right of drawing a net in the port or harbour of the said borough. The record concludes with enumerating some trifling properties held by exchequer rents.

In 1388, John, Lord Neville, died seised of ten burgages in Sunderland, held by fealty and suit at the borough court; and, it is also recorded that John de Hedworth died seised of twelve acres of land, held under burgage rent and landmail. In 1546, Robert Neville, Bishop of Durham, granted to Robert Bowes, by copy of court roll, all the borough of Sunderland, the ferry boat passage, fisheries, and the dues for ships, &c., to hold for his life.

By letters patent, dated 12th February, 1463, Edward IV. granted the borough, together with the passage of the river and the fisheries, to Robert Bertram, during the vacancy of the see of Durham. In 1507, Bishop Bainbrigg granted the borough of Sunderland by copy of court roll, to Sir Ralph Bowes, Knt., of Dalden, under £6 rent. The same prelate also granted a license to John Hedworth to alienate lands in Sunderland. The first lease of the anchorage and beaconage occurs under Bishop Tunstall. Several leases of the borough, and its appendant privileges, have been granted at different periods, and latterly they have been divided into two leases; the one including the borough, the courts, fairs, markets, tolls, anchorage, and beaconage, has been vested, under different renewals, in the Lambton family, who still hold it; the other, which comprises the ferry boats, the netage, and tolls of fruit, herbs, and roots, was held from the year 1661 until 1795, by the family of Etterick, at which period the lease was purchased by the commissioners of Wearmouth Bridge, under the powers of the act 32nd George III.

After the palatine jurisdiction of the bishops of Durham had been abridged by Henry VIII., Sunderland soon became a place of importance, and it is probable that about the latter end of the reign of Elizabeth, or in the early part of that of James I., the coal trade began to find its way into the Wear. Richard Barnes, who held the see of Durham from 1577 to 1587, appointed a water bailiff for this port; and several succeeding prelates established, by patent, a vice-admiral and judges of their courts of admiralty. Between the years 1600 and 1630, the population of the town was considerably increased, by the influx of several families of Scotch settlers, and some foreign merchants; and, in 1634, Bishop Morton, desirous of encouraging the trade of the borough, granted a charter of incorporation to the burgesses and inhabitants by the title of mayor, twelve aldermen, and commonalty of the borough of Sunderland, allowing them the privilege of a market and annual fairs. Previous to this incorporation the borough had been governed by a bailiff, appointed under the bishop's patent. The charter states "that Sunderland is, and time out of mind hath been, an ancient borough, known by the name of the New Borough of Weremouth, containing in itself a certain port where, from which, and through which, very many ships and other vessels used by mariners, as well within the kingdom of England, as from foreign parts, come, and ply, introducing, and importing merchandise, goods, and other saleable articles, and exporting from the said port, sea coals, grindstones, rubstones, and whetstones, and other merchandise." It also states that the trade was greatly increased, by reason of the multitude of ships that resorted thither; and the borough anciently enjoyed divers liberties and free customs, as well by prescription, as by virtue of sundry charters from the bishops of Durham, confirmed to them by the crown; which, from defect in arms, proved insufficient for the ancient liberties, privileges, and free customs of the borough.

During the parliamentary wars, Sunderland became a post of some consequence, not so much from its positive importance, as from the circumstance that Newcastle had espoused the royal cause, and an embargo was laid on all ships in that port, to prevent their supplying the rebellious city of London with coals; therefore the collieries on the Wear, and the port of Sunderland, became objects of vital importance; and the latter, in 1642, received a garrison from the parliament, and Sir William Armyne, one of the parliamentary commissioners, resided here till the surrender of Newcastle in 1644. Several smart skirmishes took place in this neighbourhood between the royalists and the parliamentarians. The Scots, on the 2nd March, 1644, after a precipitate retreat, entered this town to avoid their pursuers; and on the 24th March, "being much provoked to come out of Sunderland, came to Bowdon Hill, whence, with great loss, they were forced back into their trenches; but next morning they came with many of their horse and foot on the Marquess of Newcastle's rear, and had so disordered it that the whole army was endangered; but Sir Charles Lucas, who was then in the right wing, hastened to the rear, and with his own regiment fell upon the rebels' flank, and routed them, which made the rest fly from pursuing their advantage." The Scots in Sunderland were at this time much distressed for want of provisions, five of their vessels laden with supplies from Scotland being wrecked, and two others captured by the royalists in the river Tyne. Under these circumstances all the garrison, except two regiments of infantry, left Sunderland, and afterwards encamped near South Shields. During the whole of the contest between Charles and his parliament, Sunderland remained entirely devoted to the interests of the latter, a circumstance which may perhaps in a great measure be attributed to the commanding influence of the Lilburn family, who possessed a far greater share both of property and interest than any other private family within the limits of the borough, and to the number of Scotch settlers there. Owing to the confusion and destruction so prevalent at this period, and probably from a dislike to everything originating in episcopal government, the charter granted by Bishop Morton was suffered to expire; no mayor or alderman having ever been chosen to replace those first nominated. But though the members of the corporation did not preserve their jurisdiction, "the privileges granted to the inhabitants have been expressly acknowledged by the crown, and by the courts of judicature in several suits at law, particularly touching the herbage of the town moor, and the soil thereof."

From 1648 to 1672, tradesmen's tokens were very generally issued in most places throughout England, to supply the deficiency of government currency. The only token which appears to have been issued in Sunderland was one by William Fawcett. In 1665, during the prevalence of the plague in London, that dreadful disease was imported into Sunderland by shipping, as appears by the following entry taken from the register book of the parish of Bishopwearmouth:—"Jeremy Read, Billingham in Kent, bringer of the plague, of which dyed about thirty persons out of Sunderland in three months, Sepult. 22 July, 1665." In 1697, several regiments were stationed here in consequence of an expected invasion of the Dutch. About the year 1682, the enterprising Sir Ambrose Crawley commenced an iron manufactory at Sunderland, but the situation not answering his expectations, he was induced, in 1690, to remove to Winlaton and Swalwell, on the river Tyne. An act of parliament was obtained in 1719, by which the township of Sunderland was created a distinct and independent rectory, the burgesses having previously erected the present church, vestry, and rectory-house.

In 1745, a number of people, chiefly sailors, entered the Catholic chapel in this town, "where they found several people at prayers and a couple to be married, who, with Mr. Hankin, their priest, all fled out; upon which the sailors immediately pulled down the altar and crucifix, together with all the seats, the priests' robes, all their books, the furniture, and every individual thing in the room, and burnt them in a fire made in the street for that purpose; and also a large library of books and papers belonging to the priest."

The memorable flood of November 17th, 1771, which carried away the bridge of Newcastle, and destroyed three bridges and inundated three collieries on the Wear, also caused great destruction at Sunderland. The cries of the poor boys (few of the men being on board), with the cracking of the ships, was indeed terrible. All the assistance possible was sent by the inhabitants; but the darkness and wetness of the night prevented many from receiving proper help. A great number of keels were driven away, and many boys and men were lost. A part of the pier gave way to the force of the water, and another portion was damaged by the ships that drove against it. Eight or nine dead bodies were afterwards cast ashore in the harbour. Hay stacks and great quantities of household furniture, with a staith, were driven down the shore into the sea; and thirty-four ships were wrecked at the mouth of the river.

In November 1796, Sunderland was alarmed by an affray, which occurred between the Westminster Militia and the Lowland Fencibles, both quartered in the town. It originated in the death of a tame goat belonging to the fencibles, which was wantonly killed by one of the militia. To appease the manes of their long-bearded play-fellow, which had followed the regiment out of Scotland, and was a universal favourite, the fencibles assembled under arms, and sent a defiance to their opponents, which was accepted; the parties were drawn up in battle-array in the barrack-ground, and the most sanguinary consequences were every moment expected, when the firm and strenuous exertions of Prince William, of Gloucester, commander of the troops in the place, fortunately restored peace. The offender was afterwards tried by court-martial.

A tumult took place in the corn-market here, on March 27th, 1801, in consequence of the price of wheat, 40s. being demanded for a boll of that grain. The populace immediately raked the kennels for dirt, with which they besmeared the farmer, who was glad to retreat to the Fountain Inn, the windows of which were assailed with stones, &c., as were also those of the Half Moon and Queen's Head. Besides attacking the houses, a quantity of corn was made trodden under foot, and several of the farmer's carts were hurried into the Wear, one of which was seen floating to the sea the next morning. A justice of the peace, with a few constables, seized upon one of the insurgents, and committed him to the cage; but he was soon liberated by the rioters. Things continued in this condition till about nine o'clock, when the riot act was read, and a part of the Lancashire Militia called out, which terminated the affair.

In November 1813, Sunderland was illuminated for three nights, in commemoration of Holland and Hanover, being freed from the influence of France. Many devices and transparencies were displayed; the only drawback to the affair being the demolition of numerous windows, which were not lit up.

On the afternoon of March 20th, 1815, a number of persons principally keelmen and casters on the river Wear, assembled in a riotous manner near Sunderland, and determined to pull down the bridge which had been erected across Galley's-gill, near Bishopwearmouth, for the purpose of conveying the coal-waggons belonging to Messrs. Nesham & Co. to the staiths below. They then proceeded to their work of destruction; and having entirely pulled down the bridge, set fire to the staiths at its head, and burnt all the machinery which was erected there for the purpose of conveying the waggons down the inclined plane to the spouts, where the coal was put on ship board without the intervention of keels. They also pulled down one house, and unroofed several others. Matters continued thus till a late hour at night, when a party of horse arrived from Newcastle, and dispersed the mob. One man was killed by one of the falling timbers striking him. These tumultuous proceedings originated in an idea, that other similar staiths were about to be erected upon the Wear, in consequence of which, there would not be so much employment for keelmen and casters. The injury done was estimated at £6,000. A riot took place on September 18th, 1816, in consequence of many of the tradesmen in Sunderland having refused to take the shillings and sixpences that were plain, and without the remains of the impression. From this cause, a large concourse of the poor inhabitants met after dark, and commenced an attack upon several of the shops, the windows of which were speedily demolished, and one of the shops was completely gutted by the mob, who were seen running away with hams, bacon, groceries, &c. On this being made known to the authorities, the 38th Regiment was called out, and, on the riot act being read about midnight, they prepared to make use of their arms, when the greater portion of the mob dispersed, but not until several soldiers received severe bruises from bricks, &c. The town continued in great alarm and commotion for some time after this occurrence. On the 18th of the following October, another riot took place on account of the dearness of provisions; but through the exertion of the magistrates, aided by about sixty special constables, it was speedily quelled.

On August 31st, 1822, his Royal Highness, the late Duke of Sussex, descended the river Wear to Sunderland in Mr. Lambton's (Lord Durham's) barge. The ships in the harbour were decorated with flags, and the people loudly cheered him. On entering the carriage that awaited his arrival, the populace took the horses out, and drew him to the house of A. Fenwick, Esq., where he partook of a cold collation. Previous to leaving Sunderland, the duke addressed the crowd, and thanked them for the kind reception which had been accorded to him.

In consequence of existing differences between the shipowners and seamen of the port of Sunderland, the latter, on August 3rd, 1823, attempted forcibly to prevent ships going out to sea, when a most melancholy affair took place. A ship called the Bury, was going out with a number of special constables on board, to protect the crew, when the men assembled in great numbers, and endeavoured to prevent her by boarding. They soon overpowered the civil force, when a troop of the 3rd Light Dragoons from Newcastle, who had been sent for some time before, were called upon to assist the magistrates in getting the ships out to sea. They succeeded in driving the intruders out of the ship; but in passing the north sand, where ships are obliged to keep in shore, those on board were assailed with stones and missiles, from a numerous mob of men and women, which they bore with patience for a considerable time; but one of the soldiers having been severely wounded, in the face, they were ordered to fire in their own defence, which they did at first over the heads of the rioters, but without effect. A second volley was then fired, by which three men were killed, and several wounded. After this affray, the town remained in great commotion for some time, but, more military having been procured from Newcastle, things were soon restored to their accustomed state of tranquillity.

The Duke of Wellington visited Sunderland on October 4th, 1827, when a grand dinner was given to him, in the Exchange. The ladies of Sunderland having entered into a subscription to form a triumphal arch across the High-street at Sunnyside, a most elegant structure, covered with flowers and evergreens, was raised at their expense. The top of the arch was ornamented with a standard, bearing the arms of the United Kingdom, over which was a large streamer, inscribed "The Ladies' Welcome to Wellington." The duke reached Sunderland about five o'clock; and in passing under the triumphal arch, roses and crowns of laurel were dropped into his carriage by three young ladies, who occupied the centre of the arch. On arriving at the Exchange, an address was read, and presented to his grace, to which he made a suitable reply. Amongst the names of those who were present at the dinner, we find those of the Marquis of Londonderry, Earl Bathurst, the Marquis of Douro, Lord Castlereagh, Lord Ravensworth, Sir Walter Scott, the Hon. and Rev. Dr. Wellesley, Hon. H. T. Liddell, &c.

During Tuesday, October 14th, 1829, above 150 colliers had arrived safely in Sunderland harbour, and several sailed again laden, with a fine north-west wind and a smooth sea; but during the night, the wind having shifted to the north-east, a most tremendous sea came on, and morning presented one of the most awful spectacles witnessed there for many years. Daylight discovered four vessels lying on their broadsides on the south rocks, and by three o'clock in the afternoon, there were fifteen vessels on shore, and wrecked between the south pier and Hendon. About four o'clock, the Eleanor, of Monkwearmouth, which had sailed the day previous for the northward, in putting back, sunk off the mouth of the harbour, and all on board perished, in sight of some thousands of spectators, unable to render the slightest assistance.

On October 26th, 1831, the cholera made its first appearance at Sunderland, and so fatal were its effects, that between the above day and April 3rd, 1832, there were 538 persons attacked, of whom 205 died. It having been decided by Doctors Daun and Barry, who had been sent to Sunderland by the government, that the disease was of a highly malignant and contagious nature, the ships from that port were put under a quarantine for fifteen days, causing great stagnation of business, which added much to the distress among the lower orders. An hospital was fitted up for the reception of patients; the magistrates ordered the streets to be cleansed by the fire-engines; and a committee of gentlemen was formed, who divided the town into districts, and visited each daily, in order that all persons attacked by cholera might have medical aid.

A tremendous hurricane visited Sunderland on February 17th, 1836, when the wind being from north-east, produced the highest tide ever remembered in that port. At high water, the tide was level with the quays, which, in many places, and for some time, were impassable. The shipping in the port was but slightly injured; but the damage suffered by the harbour, was considerable. All the frame work at the north pier end was washed away, with the engine erected thereon for driving the piles. An immense quantity of timber and other materials were washed away from off the piers, and from the shipbuilding yards. The south-east end of the bond timber yard, at Monkwearmouth, was washed down; the south pier was also much injured, and the greatest part of the breast work at the pier end was carried away; and two vessels were totally wrecked.

On January 12th, 1837, an alarming fire broke out in the patent rope manufactory of R. Webster, Esq., at Deptford. As soon as it was practicable, the engines were set to work, and every exertion made to preserve as much of the property as possible; but notwithstanding every effort, the whole of the extensive manufactory, with its machinery, &c., was burned to the ground. The loss amounted to nearly £60,000.

Sunderland was visited by a severe hurricane on Saturday, the 5th January, 1837. The storm commenced in the evening accompanied by hail and rain, and continued without intermission until Monday morning, when its effects became alarmingly visible. In all parts of the town, the streets were strewed with tiles, slates, bricks, and stones; and the injury done to property was very great. Many houses were completely unroofed. Much damage also occurred to the shipping in the river; many of the vessels broke from their moorings, and came in contact with each other.

On November 12th, of the same year, the Duke of Sussex again visited Sunderland, when he laid the foundation stone of the Athenæum. In the same month, the port of Sunderland was declared by an order in council, to be a fit and proper place for the importation of goods from parts within the limits of the East India Company's Charter. On November 13th, 1840, the coasts of Durham and Northumberland were visited by a violent storm, attended by disastrous consequences to the ports of Sunderland and Newcastle. In January of the following year, a severe frost having occurred, the river Wear above Sunderland Bridge presented one sheet of ice, as far as the eye could reach. Upon a thaw taking place, the river rose rapidly, and, rushing down with great force, tore away whole tiers of ships from their moorings at the Hetton and Lambton staitths, hurried them rapidly underneath the bridge, breaking their masts in the passage, and then dashing them against the vessels below, swept away tier after tier, and huddled them into a mass of wrecks, extending from one side of the river to the other, opposite the Durham and Sunderland Railway staitths.

Sunderland has given the title of earl to two noble families. It was first conferred by Charles I. on Emanuel, Lord Scrope of Bolton, lord president of the north; but he dying without issue, on the 6th June, 1643, the title was given to Henry, Lord Spencer of Wormleighton, who fell in the royal service, in the first battle of Newbury, in the same year. The honour still remains in his descendants, and is the third title of the Duke of Marlborough, Marquis of Blandford, and Earl of Sunderland.

CHURCHES.—Monkwearmouth Parish Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient structure, consisting of nave, chancel, north aisle, and tower; the south aisle having at some former period been totally destroyed. It has undergone frequent repairs and alterations, and the interior having been much modernised, it retains little of its original appearance. The tower is supposed to have belonged to the ancient abbey of Wearmouth. The church contains several sculptural slabs and mural monuments; and formerly possessed a chantry, dedicated to St. Lawrence, which was founded here in 1220, by one of the Hetoif family, to whom the advowson of the living formerly belonged. In 1790, the parish registers were destroyed by the fire which broke out in the Hall, then the residence of the minister, excepting the register of marriages from 16th October, 1785, of baptisms from 2nd September, 1779, and of burials from 8th January, 1768. The living is a discharged curacy in the deanery of Chester, and a peculiar belonging to the dean and chapter of Durham. The revenue of the curacy, which amounts to about £225 per annum, is derived from the surplice fees, forty-five acres of land at Hedworth in the parish of Jarrow, and the interest of £2,000 augmentation money. There is also a small pension from the exchequer. Patron, Sir Hedworth Williamson; incumbent, Rev. Benjamin Kennicott, A.B.

Bishopwearmouth Parish Church is a cruciform structure, dedicated to St. Michael, situated in High-street, where it was rebuilt in 1807, on the site of the ancient church, which had existed since the days of Athelstan, but having become "ruinous and uncomfortable," it was taken down and the present edifice erected in its stead, partly at the expense of the pewholders, and partly at the expense of the parish. The tower was added to the church shortly after its opening; and, in 1849, and the following year, the transepts were erected. A new organ was built in 1855. The old church contained a chantry, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, the value of which at the dissolution was £3 15s. 4d. The parish register commences in 1567. The living is a rectory, valued in the Liber Regis at £89 18s. 1½d.; gross income, £3,346. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, Rev. J. P. Eden, M.A.; curates, Rev. G. J. Wallas, B.A., and Rev. D. Faulkner.

Sunderland Parish Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1719, and consecrated by the Bishop of London, on the 5th September in that year. It is a plain brick structure, with stone mouldings round the windows and doors. The interior is handsome, and comprises a nave and chancel, and aisles, the latter of which are separated from the nave by seven elegant pillars on each side, with Corinthian capitals. The communion table occupies a recess, covered by a dome supported in front by two Corinthian columns. There are galleries on each side, and at the west end of the nave; the front of the latter is charged with the royal arms, and those of Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham. Above the gallery is a smaller one for the accommodation of the choir. In 1803, the church was newly roofed. Sunderland was separated from the parish of Bishopwearmouth, by act of parliament in 1719, and constituted a distinct and independent rectory, the burgesses having previously erected the present church, vestry, and rectory house, upon part of one of the common fields, called the Intack, where they also enclosed a piece of ground for a cemetery. The parish register commences in 1719. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of St. John's attached; not in charge; returned at £89; gross income of the former, £264; of the latter, £122. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, Rev. H. Peters; curates, Rev. J. Haslewood and Rev. — Caswell.

All Saints' District Church, situated at Monkwearmouth, and close to the road leading to Fulwell, is a handsome stone building, in the early English style, erected in 1848 at a cost of about £3,000. It consists of nave, chancel, and south aisle; the window in the chancel is of stained glass. The living is in the gift of the Queen and the Bishop of Durham, who present alternately. Incumbent, the Rev. B. O. Kennicott, B.A.

St. John's Church, or Chapel of Ease to Sunderland church, head of Barrack-street, was erected by subscription in 1769, on a site given by Marshall Robinson, Esq., of Herrington. It is a brick structure, ornamented with hewn stone, and contains three spacious galleries, one of which is generally appropriated for the use of the military in the neighbouring barracks. The living is annexed to that of the mother church, and is vested in the same patrons. The curates of Sunderland attend here.

St. Thomas' District Church, or Chapel of Ease to Bishopwearmouth church, situated in John-street, was erected in 1827-29, at a cost of £6,000. It is a neat structure, in the Gothic style, consisting of nave and aisles, with front and side galleries, and contains about 1,000 sittings, one half of which are free. The font, situated near the west end of the church, is an octagonal basin of Caen stone, the sides of which are ornamented with shields of arms, &c. The organ is a fine toned instrument, by Bishop, of London. The eastern window is of three lights, and filled with stained glass, bearing representations of the Adoration of the Magi, the four Evangelists, the Emblems of the Passion, &c. There are two other stained windows on the north side, on one of which is the Resurrection and the Last Judgment, and on the other the Conversion of St. Paul. There is a Lending Library in connection with the church. Rev. Richard Skipsey, incumbent

St. Andrew's District Church, situated at Deptford, is a fine structure, in the early English style, erected from designs furnished by Thomas Moore, Esq., architect, at a cost of £2,000, and consecrated by the Bishop of Durham, on December 14th, 1841. It comprises nave, aisles, and chancel, with side and end galleries, and contains 2,000 sittings, of which 915 are free and unappropriated. The chancel is lighted by a large and elegant stained glass window, presented to the church by James Hartley, Esq., of Bishopwearmouth, who also gave the whole of the glass required for the other windows. By an order in council, dated May 23rd, 1844, the queen was pleased to assign to this church a district, of which the following are the boundaries:—It commences by the Newbottle or Lambton staiths, by the river Wear, and proceeds along the middle of the river, as far as the township of Ford; it then turns, in a south-easterly direction, along the boundary of Ford township, till it reaches Hylton-lane; along which it proceeds easterly, following the boundary of the glebe lands, as far as the Old Iron Works, including Aiskel's and Ogden's land, and from the Old Iron works down the eastern side of the street called Farrington-row, till it meets the rector's glebe, and so down to the Newbottle or Lambton staiths, whence the boundary commenced. The living is in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. Incumbent, the Rev. W. H. Bulmer; curate, Rev. John Kingston.

St. Paul's Church, Hendon, is a handsome building, of hewn stone, in the early English style of architecture, erected by subscription, at a cost of £2,500, and consecrated by the Bishop of Cape Town, November 28rd, 1852. It consists of nave, chancel, and south aisle, and contains about 700 sittings, 318 of which are free. The living is in the patronage of the Rector of Bishopwearmouth, and incumbency of the Rev. Benjamin Mathie; curate Rev. James Holme.

St. Mary's (Catholic) Church, situated in Bridge-street, was erected in 1835, and the architecture in general is of the early English period. The building is plain, but substantial; the east end presents a large centre window of three lights, with two aisle windows of a single light each, and two stair windows of two lights each. The interior is 120 feet in length by 50 in breadth, and 40 in height to the timber ceiling. There are no aisles, the roof being a single span, and the ceiling panelled and painted. The side windows are four in number, two on each side, and are single lights. There is no window at the west or altar end; a gallery, which formerly contained an organ, is placed at the east end. The entrance doors from the street are two in number, one at the front of each staircase. On the south and north sides of the high altar are respectively the Lady Chapel and St. Joseph's Chapel, erected in 1852, each thirty feet long, twenty-four wide, and thirty-six high; and each lighted by one triple and two single lancet windows. The Lady Chapel contains the font, and communicates with the sacristy, which is thirty-four feet long and sixteen wide. An image of the Blessed Virgin is placed between the Lady Chapel and the high altar. In St. Joseph's Chapel, which has as yet no altar, the girls of the convent schools are placed on Sundays. Behind them are the organ-loft and choir, under which a portion of the chapel is screened off for the Sisters of Mercy of St. Bede's Convent. On the south side of the main body of the church are the confessionals. The church contains sittings for about 1,200 persons. The presbytery is attached to the south side of the church facing Bridge-street, and is of considerable size. On the north side of St. Joseph's Chapel are the schools; the Boys' School, conducted by the Presentation Brothers, occupying the first floor, and the Girls' School, which is under the care of the Sisters of Mercy, the second floor. There are separate staircases and suitable conveniences for each school. To the west of the church, and separated from it by a narrow street, is St. Bede's Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, containing eleven nuns—this was formerly a dwelling-house, and possesses a large garden. A new convent chapel, infirmary, school and instruction rooms, are about to be erected within the precincts of the convent. The church, schools, and convent, have been established by the exertions and sacrifices of the Rev. Philip Kearney, the present rector of St. Mary's. His zealous and active assistants in his pastoral duties are the Rev. John Bamber and the Rev. Francis Kirsopp.

CHAPELS.—Baptist Chapel, Hallgarth-square, Monkwearmouth Shore, is a small, plain, brick building, erected in 1846; all its sittings are free and unappropriated.

Baptist Chapel, Maling's Rig, occupies a building which formerly served as a Freemason's Lodge, but has been occupied by this body since 1842. It will accommodate about 200 persons. Mr. George Preston, preacher.

Bethany Chapel.—This place of worship, situated in Hedworth-terrace, is a brick building, erected in 1849, at a cost of £1,100. Rev. J. Halcro, minister.

Bethel Chapel, the property of the Independents, is a large and commodious structure, with a handsome stone front, situated in Villiers-street. It was erected in 1817, and altered and improved in 1826, at a cost of about £3,000. The number of sittings is upwards of 1,000. Rev. Edward Bowlay, minister.

Bethesda Free Chapel, Tatham-street, Bishopwearmouth, is a large handsome building, erected in 1844, by the Rev. A. A. Rees, formerly curate of Sunderland, whose private property it is. It belongs to no particular denomination, but adult baptism is practised similar to the Baptists, for which purpose a small well has been constructed near the pulpit. The interior is comfortably fitted up with pews, and has front and side galleries. No charge is made for seats, the sittings being all free, but boxes bearing the inscription "The labourer is worthy of his hire," are placed at the entrances to the chapel, for the reception of the voluntary contributions of the congregation and strangers. Sittings are provided for 1,300 persons. A school is held in the chapel on Sunday afternoons. Rev. A. A. Rees, minister.

Congregational Chapel.—This handsome edifice, situated in Fawcett-street, was erected in 1851, at a cost of £2,600. It is of stone, and has a day school and vestry attached. Rev. G. Maitland, minister.

The Friends' Meeting House is in Nile-street, Bishopwearmouth, and is a handsome stone building, erected in 1822, at a cost of nearly £3,000. There is a burial ground attached; but this having been recently closed by direction of the Secretary of State, the Friends have purchased ground in the New General Cemetery.

The Independent Chapel, Dundas-street, Monkwearmouth Shore, is a brick building, erected in 1832. Rev. Wm. Parks, minister.

Jews' Synagogue.—The Jews assemble for worship, according to the rights of their ancient faith, in a building situated in Vine-street, Bishopwearmouth, formerly the property and residence of the celebrated Lieutenant-colonel John Lilburn. A short distance to the west of Bishopwearmouth there is a small burial ground belonging to this people.

Jireh Chapel, belonging to the Calvinists, is now in course of erection near the Borough-road, and the estimated cost is £800. This is to replace the Corn Market Chapel, formerly used by this congregation; but which now serves as a saloon.

The Particular Baptist Chapel, Sans-street, Bishopwearmouth, is a brick edifice, with stone quoins and dressings, erected in 1798, and rebuilt in 1853. Rev. J. Redmond, minister. The same denomination have another place of worship, the Enon Chapel, in Barclay-street, Monkwearmouth Shore, which was built in 1834, and contains sittings for 400 persons.

Providence Chapel, belonging to the Methodist New Connexion, is a neat brick building, situated in Dame Dorothy-street, Monkwearmouth Shore where it was erected in 1854. There is a Sunday-school attached.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel, Flag-lane, Bishopwearmouth, was erected in 1824, at a cost of about 1,500; a Sunday-school was added in 1850. The same body have places of worship in Waterloo-street and Hodgson's Buildings, Monkwearmouth, and Hopper-street, Bishopwearmouth.

Salem Chapel.—This place of worship, situated in Broad-street, Monkwearmouth, was erected by the Independents, in 1817; and, being subsequently purchased from that body by the dean and chapter of Durham, was for some time used as a Chapel of Ease to the parish church of Monkwearmouth. It has been closed since the opening of All Saints' Church.

Seamen's Bethel, South Dock, was opened on Easter Tuesday, 1855, in a room given by Messrs. Cathay and Robinson. Rev. S. Reeves, minister.

St George's Chapel, Villiers-street, belongs to the Presbyterians, and is an elegant stone structure, of the Doric order, erected in 1825, at a cost of upwards of £4,000. Rev. Dr. Paterson, minister.

The Scotch Church, situated in North Bridge-street, Monkwearmouth Shore, is a large stone structure, with handsome front of hewn stone, erected about the year 1835, at a cost of £1,800, and will seat 500 persons. There are school-rooms under the chapel. Rev. Andrew Hardie, minister.

Smyrna Chapel, which belongs to the United Presbyterians, is situated in the Borough-road, Bishopwearmouth, and is a handsome brick structure, with manse and school-house attached. It contains sittings for 600 persons. Rev. John Parker, minister.

Union Chapel.—This neat edifice stands in Coronation-street, and was built in 1822, at an expense of £1,200. It is the property of the United Presbyterian body, and is under the pastoral care of the Rev. B. J. Muir.

The Tabernacle.—This chapel, situated in South Durham-street, Bishopwearmouth, belongs to the Methodist Association, and was erected in 1835. It is a large brick building, capable of accommodating 800 persons.

The United Presbyterian Church, Hamilton-street, Monkwearmouth Shore, was erected in 1827, and will accommodate about 650 worshippers. Rev. John Mathison, minister. The same denomination have another chapel in Maling's Rig, which was erected in 1776, and enlarged in 1796, Rev. J. Muir, minister.

Wesleyan School for Girls, Nicholson-street, Bishopwearmouth, is a large room over the British School. It is under government inspection, superintended by a committee of ladies, and was established in its present system in 1854. The number in attendance is 150. Elizabeth Milbourn, teacher.

There are many other schools, which our limited space will not allow us to particularise; they will be found, with the names of their teachers, in the Directory.

HOSPITALS AND ALMS HOUSES.—The Aged Seamen's Asylum, Trafalgar-square, consists of thirteen houses, each of which contains eight rooms, and are occupied by old worn out seamen, and the widows of seamen. The buildings were erected by the trustees of the Muster Roll, under the act 4 and 5 William IV. On the front is a slab, bearing the date 1840, and the names of the trustees. John Dallowell, governor.

Bowes' Alms Houses, Bishopwearmouth Green, were founded by the Rev. John Bowes, rector of Bishopwearmouth, about the year 1725, as a residence for poor widows. The only endowment arises from a bequest made by Dr. Thomas Ogle, who, in 1725, charged his estate in Stainton with the payment of £5 per annum to the inmates of these alms houses for ever, redeemable on payment of £100. This sum was afterwards paid by his family to the dean and chapter of Durham, and from them £5 a year is received by the rector, who distributes it amongst the almswomen.

The Freeman's Hospital, 16 and 17, Church-street, was erected in 1719, and is inhabited by eight poor widows. This hospital has long been in the possession of the Freeman and Stallingers of Sunderland, who, from time to time, as vacancies occur, appoint the inmates.

Gibson's Alms Houses, for single women, are situated in Church-lane, and were founded in pursuance of the will of Jane Gibson, who, on July 14th, 1725, gave to Isabel Reed, of Bishopwearmouth, £1,400, to purchase ground to build thereon twelve rooms in the parish of Bishopwearmouth, or Sunderland, and the sum remaining after building the rooms was to be put out at interest, to be paid yearly to twelve poor persons that shall from time to time be chosen to inhabit the said rooms. Elizabeth Reed intermarried with Ralph Robinson, Esq., of Middle Herrington, and, jointly with her husband, fulfilled and enlarged the intentions of the donor, built the hospital on her own ground and laid out £1,000 in the purchase of copyhold lands, within the town fields of Bishopwearmouth. The building consists of a centre and two wings, with a small enclosed court, and stands a little to the east of the church. The income is about £150 per annum. The appointment of the inmates is vested by the will of the founder and a subsequent decree, in the family of Mowbray, late of Ford, the only descendants and representatives of Isabel Reed.

The Marine Alms Houses.—By indenture, bearing date 29th August, 1820, enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, for the foundation and endowment of certain alms houses in Bishopwearmouth, now known by the name of the Marine Alms Houses, Elizabeth Woodcock, the founder, declared that she herself, for life, and after her decease, the Bishop of Durham for the time being, should be the visitor of the charity thereby established. These alms houses are pleasantly situated in Crow Tree-lane, and are for the reception of ten widows or unmarried daughters of master mariners, above fifty-five years of age. They have each an apartment and a stipend of £10 a-year; the matron receives £14. Rev. H. Peters, Rev. J. P. Eden, Sir Hedworth Williamson, Bart., Rev. Thomas Baker, Mr. J. Simpson, and Mr. Robinson, trustees; Mrs. Shield, matron.

The Seamen's Hall or Assembly Room. Assembly Garth, with the adjacent buildings, were purchased in the year 1750, for £148, in pursuance of an act of parliament passed in the 20th year of the reign of George II., and entitled 'An act for the relief and support of maimed and disabled seamen, and the widows and children of such as shall be killed, slain, or drowned, in the merchants' service.' There are at present eight houses in the square occupied by fifty tenants. A sailor receives two shillings per month, a widow the same amount, and one shilling for each child under fourteen years of age. Persons possessed of a house are not entitled to relief. The hall is used as a place of worship by the Primitive Methodists; and Lieutenant-Colonel Parkinson, superintendent of the Mercantile Marine Pension Office, has his office here. The following are the trustees of the Aged Seamen's Asylum, Trafalgar-square, and the Hospital Houses, Assembly Garth, viz.:—Messrs. C Alcock, Martin Lowie, Martin Moore, Thomas Anderson, Allison Whitfield, William Sanderson, Thomas Armstrong, William Milburn, Martin Douglas, George Cook, William Dawson, James Crosby, Thomas Graydon, William H. Watson, and William Farrow; W. J. Smith, secretary.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS AND SOCIETIES.—The Bishopwearmouth and Sunderland Infirmary and Dispensary, situated at the west end of Bishopwearmouth, and close to the Durham turnpike road, is a large brick building, erected in 1822, at a cost of £3,000, and will accommodate sixty patients. There are apartments for the surgeon, matron, and nurses, besides the requisite offices. It is supported by subscriptions and donations. The institution is under the patronage of the Lord Bishop of Durham, and of eight presidents, including the principal noblemen of the county. The twelve vice-presidents and three acting trustees consist of the principal resident gentry. Four physicians and two surgeons, with house apothecary and surgeon, compose the medical department. For list of officers, &c., see Directory.

The Eye Infirmary, 40, Numbers Garth, was founded June 13th, 1836, since which period the number of those who have sought the aid of the institution is nearly 8,000. Persons suffering from any disease of the eye, are admitted as patients, without ticket or recommendatory letter. The infirmary is open from one to two on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

The Lying-in Charity, Wear-street, was established in 1803, and, since its commencement, upwards of 7,000 poor married women have had the benefit of the institution, 105 having been relieved during the present year. It is under the patronage of the Marchioness of Londonderry, and is managed by a committee of ladies.

The Ragged School, situated in Silver-street, was established in October, 1849, and is supported by subscriptions. There are fifty-four children of both sexes in attendance, who are clothed, fed, and educated, free of charge, eight of them are also lodged. A large house in Silver-street, formerly used as a custom house, and purchased for the Corporation Gas Company, is now undergoing repairs, &c., and will be opened as the Ragged School in March, 1856. A shoemaker and tailor attend daily from two to five. James and Ellen Short, teachers.

Sailors' Home, Exchange Commercial Buildings, High-street, was opened in May, 1852, and will accommodate between thirty and forty inmates. James Milne, manager.

Besides these institutions, Sunderland possesses a Humane Society, a Society for the Relief of the Widows and Children of Shipwrecked Seamen, a Sailors' Society, an Indigent Sick Society, a branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society, Town Missionary Society, &c., for which see Directory.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, &c.—The Assembly Rooms, Upper Sans-street, are the property of Mr. G. H. Rennison, silversmith, Bridge-street, Bishopwearmouth. They were erected in 1839, and are used as a county court, &c. There is a small room attached, which is let to building and other societies.

The Barracks, situated in Barrack-street, were erected in the year 1794, and put into commission in the beginning of the following year, when the first barrack master was appointed. They were originally constructed for 1,520 men and 41 officers, and possess every requisite convenience for an establishment of the kind. They are at present occupied by the North Durham Militia.

Baths and Wash Houses, Hendon-road, are the property of the corporation, and were erected in 1850, at a cost of £3,000. They were opened on the 7th January, 1851. They occupy a handsome brick building, with stone dressings, and over the entrance is a neat slab, bearing the arms of the borough of Sunderland. The interior arrangements are very complete, and comprise hot, cold, vapour, and shower baths, with laundry, and drying and wash houses. John Small, superintendent; Mary E. Small, matron.

Baths and Wash Houses (Williamson's), Monkwearmouth Shore, were erected in 1854, at an expense of £2,500, on land given by Sir Hedworth Williamson, Bart. The establishment comprises thirty-two washing stands, ten hot and cold baths, and one vapour bath. Thomas Smith, superintendent.

The Cemetery, Thornton-place, Bishopwearmouth, was opened in October, 1839, the ground having been given by the Rev. Dr. Wellesley, late rector of Bishopwearmouth, and enclosed by the parishioners. It should have been closed in May, 1854; but owing to the difficulty of obtaining a suitable place for interment, the Secretary of State allowed it to remain open until the new cemetery, now in course of formation, on the right of the road leading to Chester-le-Street, is finished. The new cemetery comprises upwards of thirty-three acres of glebe land, purchased from the dean and chapter of Durham, at £275 per acre. The different denominations and communities in the surrounding parishes will have places of interment allotted for them here. This cemetery must be opened in May, 1856, and the total cost of formation will be near £2,000.

The Exchange, situated in High-street, is a chaste and elegant structure, erected in 1812-14, from designs furnished by Mr. Stokoe, of Newcastle, at an expense of £8,000, which was raised in shares of £50 each. The building presents a front of 95 feet in length; the basement storey containing kitchen, vaults, &c. The central space on the ground floor is laid out in the piazza form, as an exchange or merchant's walk; and the adjoining rooms on each side are suitably adapted for the use of the merchants, public sales, brokers' offices, &c. The upper storey contains rooms used by the different boards of commissioners, viz., the Wear Bridge, roads, &c., and a handsome and commodious newsroom, 68 feet in length by 28 in breadth, which is well supplied with the leading papers of the day, maps, and every accommodation usually met with in such institutions. The affairs of the news-room are conducted by a committee, annually chosen from among the proprietors; and members who are not proprietors are chosen by ballot.

The Gas Works are situated in Wellington-lane, Ayre's-quay, Hind-street, Bishopwearmouth; Russell-street, Sunderland; Strand-street and Hallgarth-street, Monkwearmouth. The original works were established, on a small scale, in Russell-street, in 1825. The present annual consumption of gas is about 80,000,000 cubic feet. The company called "The Sunderland Corporation Gas Company," was incorporated in 1846. The principal office is 61, Fawcett-street, Bishopwearmouth. For officers, &c. see Directory.

The Iron Bridge.—Previously to 1792 the river had been crossed by means of two ferries: the first project entertained was that of erecting a stone bridge, which was abandoned for the present structure, of which the first stone was laid September 24th, 1793, and the work completed in 1796, at a total cost of £33,400, of which sum £30,000 was advanced by Rowland Burdon, Esq., M.P. for the county. The bridge was built under the direction of Mr. Thomas Wilson, of Monkwearmouth, and consists of one magnificent arch, 236 feet in the span, and 100 feet in height from low-water mark, admitting vessels of from 200 to 300 tons burthen to pass underneath; the abutments are nearly solid masonry, 24 feet thick, 42 broad at bottom, and 37 at the top; the breadth of the carriage way is 32 feet, with flagged foot-paths on each side, defended by an iron balustrade; the whole weight of iron is 200 tons, 46 of which are malleable and the remainder cast.

Public Park, Building Hill.—The description given by the Sunderland Herald, in a recent publication, is so much in unison with our own ideas of the place, that we cannot do better than give the notice entire:—"We but express the general feeling in the borough when we pronounce Building Hill to be the most delightful retreat in this quarter of the country. The operations connected with the laying out of the ground to the north appear to be drawing to a close, and those who had not visited the locality for some time until the present fine weather set in, were altogether taken by surprise with the transformation which it had undergone. Already is it a resort of all ranks, and of every age, and, without being over-fanciful, we can almost imagine that ere long the influence of such a pleasure-ground will be visibly exerted on the whole community. In large commercial towns, such places become doubly valuable, for in proportion as men become immersed in business cares, the love of nature, and their experience of the quiet joys which flow from intercourse with the 'fairer forms which cultivation glories in,' grow fainter and fainter, even supposing that they ever entertained such pleasurable emotions. To those of our readers who were formerly residents in Sunderland, but who are now removed from the borough, it may be necessary to mention that the improvements referred to consist in the ornamental laying out of the wide extent of ground stretching from the north-west corner of the hill at Ryhope road, to the entrance from Wellington-road, at the north-east. As the absent Sunderlander may well remember, this quarter of the hill used to be nothing else than a series of rubbish mounds; and tangled weeds, with the quarryman's blast, were the only sights and sounds which demanded particular attention from the stray visitor. Now the scene is entirely changed: 'the wilderness and the solitary place' is become a garden of delights—neatly trimmed knolls of living green begem the waste of old, and where their graceful undulations terminate, the wide-spreading lawn will yet prolong the verdant gambol, and the young trees clap their hands at the moaning wind. Well-formed walks run through the park,—now lifting the straggler into view of the glad blue sea, then leading him under the shadow of the frowning rock, and anon carrying him 'o'er the hills and far away.' Hither, at early morning, will the slave of desk or of counter wend his joyful way; here, at noon's full tide, old age will commune with memory, whilst childhood's glad glee wakes up the echoes; and at day's decline, the young maiden, walking forth in the dawn.

of love, will wander here in sweet companionship with one, who may be nothing to the world, but who is all the world to her. A truce, however, to sentimentalism, and one word to the public: Let those who frequent the pleasure-ground avoid every act that would tend to injure it in the slightest degree, and endeavour to preserve the shrubs and the ground from every rude hand and wanton footstep. We expect yet to see an edging of flowers put in here and there, to enliven the rather monotonous embankments about the centre of the park; and if seats were put down at intervals every possible requirement would be supplied. But these matters are in very good hands, and when the improvements are entirely completed, there will be no better memorial needed in honour of those gentlemen to whom the people of Sunderland owe such an invaluable privilege. This park will cover many corporation sins, and those who seek for the monument of the men who have done the town most service, have only to go to Building Hill, and look around."

Railway Station.—The North-Eastern Railway Station, Monkwearmouth Shore, was opened in 1848. William Strong, stationmaster. A goods station is now in course of construction adjoining, and is expected to be open during the current year. The present goods station is in Broad-street, Monkwearmouth, and will be closed upon the opening of the new one. The same company (the North-Eastern) have also a station in Fawcett street, Bishopwearmouth, which was opened on June 1st, 1853, and is called the Sunderland and Durham Station. A coal line is continued from this station to the docks. Frederick Davies, stationmaster. There is another station on this line at Millfield, Bishopwearmouth. The Moor Station, for goods and passengers, is situated at the extremity of the moor, and close to the Sunderland Docks. The Londonderry, Seaham, and Sunderland Station was opened in 1855. Edward Charlton, manager and superintendent.

The Police Station, West Wear-street, is a neat brick building, erected in 1842, adjoining which are the Mayor's Chambers, Corporation Offices, and the residence of the superintendent of police. Petty sessions are held here daily.

The Sunderland Poor Law Union embraces an area of 11,944 acres, and its population in 1851 was 56,226 souls. It is divided into five sub-districts, viz.:—North Bishopwearmouth, comprising the townships of Ford, Bishopwearmouth Pans, and part of that of Bishopwearmouth; South Bishopwearmouth, comprising another part of the township of Bishopwearmouth, and the townships of Tunstall and Ryhope; East Sunderland, comprising part of Sunderland parish; West Sunderland, comprising the remaining part of Sunderland parish, and part of the township of Bishopwearmouth; Monkwearmouth, comprising the townships of Monkwearmouth, Monkwearmouth Shore, Fulwell, Hylton, and Southwick. The Union Workhouse is situated on Hylton-road, and is a handsome brick building, in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1854-5, at a cost of £11,450, and will accommodate 500 persons. The number of inmates at present is 301. The total receipts of the union for the year ending September 1855, was £14,939 7s. 2d., and the expenditure for the same period was £15,345 0s. 3d. Alexander Baity, master; Ann Baity, matron; Duncan Cameron and Anne Hawksford, teachers.

The Sunderland Total Abstinence Society was formed November 11, 1835, since which time it has gradually progressed, and now numbers some thousands of members. Last year 150 public meetings were held, 70,000 pages of tracts distributed, and 200 members enrolled. It is purposed to erect a temperance hall in the town as soon as sufficient funds can be obtained for the purpose.

The Water Works, situated at Hamilton Hill, were established by act of parliament in 1846, after which the company purchased the Bishopwearmouth Water Works, now laid up. There is one reservoir into which the water is pumped from a well thirty-four fathoms deep, by an engine of 180 horse power. This company, in 1852, obtained an act of parliament, by the provisions of which they are authorised to supply South Shields with water, and connect it with Sunderland. For this purpose they have established works at Fulwell, where the water is raised from the sandstone by two engines of sixty horse power each. For officers, &c. see Directory.

The Theatre Royal is a commodious building, situated in Drury-lane, but is about to be superseded by a new theatre, now in course of erection in Bedford-street, Bishopwearmouth. The new structure is of brick, with a cut stone front, in the Corinthian and Ionic styles of architecture, and will accommodate about 1,400 persons. The interior is to be fitted up in the most elegant style, and on the most approved principles. It is expected to be opened early in 1856. Samuel Roxby, manager. There is another theatre in Lambton-street, the Lyceum, which was erected in 1851.

LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS, &c.—The Athenæum, situated in Fawcett-street, is an elegant structure of cut stone, erected in 1841, at a cost of about £5,000. The principal entrance is beneath a projecting colonnade, supported by four fluted columns, and leads to the body of the hall, which is devoted to public lectures, &c. A flight of steps leads to the Subscription Reading Room held here, which is well supplied with the various metropolitan and local journals, &c. Mr. John Swan, secretary. Beneath the reading room there is an extensive Library, containing about 7,000 volumes in the various departments of literature. Mr. John Douglas and Mr. F. John, secretaries; James Stephen, librarian. On the left of the entrance is the Sunderland Museum, which possesses a fine collection of shells, minerals, ancient coins and medals, British and foreign birds, &c. Mr. John Evans, curator; Mr. James Hill, secretary and treasurer.

Library (Sunderland Subscription), 190, High-street, was established in 1796, and now contains about 1,500 volumes of standard works in the various departments of literature, science, and art. It is governed by a committee of the members. Mr. George Garbutt, librarian.

The Mechanics' Institution, 24, Lambton-street, was founded in 1852, and now contains a library of about 1000 volumes, many of which are standard works. Lord Brougham, patron; Rev. Richard Skipsey, president; Thomas Dixon, secretary and treasurer; and Samuel Reeves, librarian.

For other Institutions, Societies, &c., see Directory.

MARKETS, FAIRS, &c.—Markets are held here every Saturday, though the ancient market-day is Friday; and there are fairs on May 13th and 14th, and October 11th and 12th. Here are extensive establishments for the making of crown and plate glass, chemical works, potteries, roperies, saw mills, flax mills, and quarries of stone, peculiarly suited for grindstones. Shipbuilding is extensively carried on; and vessels of the largest size, adapted for the commerce of all parts of the world, and of the most splendid build, are now frequently launched here, and registered at Lloyd's as first-class.*

* It appears that Sunderland vessels have accomplished some of the quickest voyages that have been made to Australia. The Chalmers, built here, effected the voyage in 111 days; and the Ventura another Sunderland ship, was only 86 days in her passage from London to Port Phillip.

The following table shows the number of ships built on the Wear, with the aggregate and average tonnage, since 1835 :—

Year.	No. of vessels.	Tons.	Average tons.

The banking business of the town is transacted by the Northumberland and Durham District Bank, the Union Banking Company, and the bank of Messrs W. H. Lambton & Co. The hours of business in these establishments are from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. There is also a Savings Bank, situated in Barclay-street, Monkwearmouth, which was commenced in July 1824, and is governed by a president, ten trustees, and upwards of twenty managers. See also Directory.

PORT, CUSTOMS, &c.—Sunderland owes its importance to its situation upon the coast, at the influx of a navigable river, flowing through a district remarkably rich in minerals, especially coal and lime. The harbour, which was exposed to serious injury from land floods and the formation of sand banks, has been greatly improved of late years under the authority of various acts of parliament. It is formed by piers, on the north and south side of the river. The south pier is about 1,890 feet in length, with a tide light at its extremity. The north pier, begun in 1788, was completed to the extent of 1,850 feet near the extreme point of which an elegant lighthouse, wholly composed of stone, was erected about fifty years ago by the late Mr. Pickernell, then engineer to the harbour commissioners. Its form is octagonal, 15 feet in breadth across its base, 62 feet in height from the surface of the pier to the top of the cornice, where it is 9 feet in breadth across, and the top of the dome is 16 feet above the cornice, making a total height of 78 feet. Prior to proceeding with the new north pier, the commissioners resolved to remove this lighthouse, in an entire state, to the eastern extremity of the pier.—a distance of nearly 500 feet. This difficult undertaking was successfully completed under the superintendence of Mr. Murray, civil engineer.* The mouth of the pier is defended by batteries placed on the opposite shore. New docks for 300 sail were opened in 1850; they comprise an area of eighteen acres, partly gained from the sea by carrying out groynes, or low walls, 500 feet long on one side, and containing from 20 to 24 feet of water. The South Extension Docks, now nearly completed, will accommodate 140 vessels, and their cost is estimated at £250,000. They are the largest known; their area, inclusive of the basins, is about 56 acres. The following are the rates and charges payable on ships and goods, under the authority of the Sunderland Dock Acts, 9 Vict. 1846, and 12 and 13 Vict. 1849.

* The plan adopted for its removal, in May 1841, was the following :—The masonry was cut through near its foundation, and timbers were inserted, one after another, through the building, and extended seven feet beyond it. Above, and at right angles to them, another tier of timbers was inserted, in like manner, so as to make the cradle or base a square of twenty-nine feet; and this cradle was supported upon bearers, with about 350 wheels of six inches in diameter, to traverse on six inches of railway, which was laid on the new pier for that purpose. The shaft of the lighthouse was tied together with bands, and its eight sides supported with timber braces from the cradle upwards to the cornice. The cradle was drawn and pushed forward along the railway by a windlass with ropes worked by thirty men. No crack or appearance of settlement is to be found in the building.

Inward Charges.—On ships with cargoes, with thirty days' privilege. Rent after that period 2d. per ton per week; for every ship from any port in the United Kingdom, or in the Isle of Man, per ton, 2d.; for every ship from any port or place in Europe between Ushant and the Naze of Norway, except the ports in the Baltic Sea, or from any port in the islands of Guernsey and Jersey, per ton, 4d.; for every ship from any port or place in the Baltic Sea, between Ushant and the Straits of Gibraltar, or between the Naze and the North Cape, per ton, 6d.; for every ship from any port or place within the Straits of Gibraltar, or to the east of the North Cape, or in the Madeira, the Azores, or North America, south of Davis' Straits, per ton, 8d.; for every ship from any port or place in Africa, between the Straits of Gibraltar and the Cape of Good Hope, or from the Canaries, Cape de Verd Islands, or St. Helena, the West Indies, the east coast of South America, Greenland, Davis' Straits, and any port or place eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, or westward of Cape Horn, per ton, 1s.

Outward Charges.—For every ship clearing for any port in the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, the White Sea, or between the North Cape and Gibraltar, including the Baltic, and for the British possessions in North America (with fourteen days' privilege), per ton, 2d.; for every ship clearing for any port within the Straits of Gibraltar, or for any port in the United States of America and the West Indies (with twenty-one days' privilege), per ton, 4d.; for every ship clearing for any other port or place than above specified (with twenty-eight days' privilege), per ton, 6d.; rent after those periods, 2d. per ton per week.

Repairing Ships.—Vessels having discharged a cargo in the dock, and requiring repairs, must pay the tonnage and other dues previous to leaving, and on re-entering will be allowed their privilege without reckoning the time they remained out.

Ballast Rates.—Discharging ballast, 1s. 3d. per ton; if clay, 8d. per ton extra. Shipping ballast, 9d. per ton. For every ship entering the dock for the sole and exclusive purpose of delivering or unloading ballast, gravel, or sand, and leaving within twenty-four hours, per ton, free; beyond twenty-four hours, and not exceeding fourteen days from entering the dock, per ton, 1½d.; ships in turn to discharge ballast, and not placed under the crane when ordered, will be charged dock dues.

Steam-boat Rates.—Towing ships from sea into the dock, 2s. per keel; ditto from the dock to sea, 2s. per keel.

Ships Lying Up.—With cargoes, or parts of cargoes, after expiration of the privileged time, 2d. per register ton per week; light ships (with fourteen days' privilege), 2d. ditto; after fourteen days, 2d. ditto; ships entering for refuge only, whether loaded or not, will be charged 2d. per ton and allowed fourteen days, after that time 2d. per ton per week.

Masting Rates.—Ships under 300 tons, 1d. per register ton n.m.; do.

300 and under 500 tons, 1½d. do., 500 and under 750 tons, 2d. do., 750 and under 1,000 tons, 2½d. do., 1,000 tons and upwards, 3d., with the use of cranes for shipping spars, tanks, &c., for outfit; but exclusive of labour, which must be found by the ship owner.

Keels entering to load timber or other cargoes from ships, or from the dock quays, or with goods for trans-shipment in the dock, will be charged one penny per ton burthen on the vessel, and one penny per load or ton on the cargo; but if to load coal for manufactories or limekilns, 1s. per keel of eight chaldrons for each time of entering. All keels must be removed from the dock by the masters thereof, immediately after being loaded or discharged, and if any master refuses or neglects to do so after notice shall have been given to him, or if the master cannot be found, in either case the keel will be removed by the dock master and his assistants, and the master will be subject to a penalty of ten pounds.

Timber Rates.—Dues on timber delivered from ships, and floated in the dock (with four days' privilege), 1d. per load. Timber, when discharged from ships, must be removed from the dock within four days after delivery into the water, and not more than sixty loads shall be afloat from one vessel at a time. Any infringement of this rule will subject the parties to a penalty, and the further delivery of the cargo will be stopped until the said quantity shall have been removed from the dock. Should any timber remain in the dock beyond twelve hours after the above period, it will be charged 6d. per load dock dues, and rent at the rate of 2d. per load per week; or it may be removed out of the dock (should the dock be inconveniently crowded with ships) at the discretion of the dock master, and at the owner's expense and risk. The Dock Company not being responsible for the safety of timber whilst lying afloat in the dock, the owners are required to secure the same in a proper manner to prevent its breaking adrift, as the company will order a timber found adrift to be lifted on the quays, and the charges consequent thereon must be defrayed previous to its removal.

Landing Charges.—Timber landed for immediate removal, including craning and labour, 1s. per load; ditto and loaded into waggons for ditto, 1s. 3d.; ditto to remain on the quays, 1s. 6d.; ditto and taken up incline, 2s. All foreign hard wood to be 6d. per load extra. Rent at the rate of 1½d. per load per week, commencing after fourteen days from the first deposit on the quay.

Coals discharged from ships, and deposited on the company's premises, will be charged a landing rate of 2d. per ton, and a further rate of 1d. per ton per week, so long as the same may remain on the said premises, after fourteen days from the date of commencing to discharge.

SHIPPING.—Sunderland, Hartlepool, and Stockton were charged, in 1662, with providing one ship of 200 tons for the service of the state. Shortly after this period, the shipping of the port began to be of some importance, and it has since gone on gradually increasing, till now, with respect to the number of its ships and their amount of tonnage, Sunderland is the fourth port in the United Kingdom; the three by which it is excelled being London, Liverpool, and Newcastle. In 1780, the number of vessels belonging to the port was 387; in 1800, 514; in 1820, 558; in 1829, 625; in 1839, it had increased to 713; and in the present year (1855), the number of vessels registered as belonging to Sunderland is 927. Besides these, a large number of steamers are constantly employed towing vessels in and out of the harbour, at the mouth of which several life-boats are stationed.

COMMERCE.—The principal articles of export are coal, lime, and the products of the various manufactories in the neighbourhood, such as crown and other glass, chemicals, earthenware, iron, in its various forms and conditions, opes, grindstones, &c., &c. The imports are chiefly flour, wine, tobacco, spirituous liquors, timber, tallow, iron, and flax. The exports and imports have long been on the increase, as the following figures will show:—In 1800, the gross receipts of customs amounted to £11,480; in 1810, to £8,413; in 1820, to £16,688; in 1825, to £65,352; in 1835, to £62,626; in 1840, to £119,681; and in the past year, to £110,000.—The Custom House business is transacted at 136 and 137 High-street. The establishment consists of a comptroller, landing surveyor, six clerks in the long-room, five searchers, thirty lockers, weighers, and tide-waiters, four tide-surveyors, and one messenger. For names of officers, &c., see Public Buildings, &c., in the Directory.

CORPORATION, &c.—Sunderland appears to have been a borough by prescription, but its records exhibit no trace of a royal charter. About 1164, a charter granted by Bishop Pudsey recognises Wearmouth—then also called Sunderland—as a borough, and confers upon the burgesses the same privileges as were enjoyed by those of Newcastle. In 1634 Bishop Morton constituted a mayor and aldermen; and Charles II., after his restoration, directed a commission to the mayor and four senior aldermen; but what were the powers and privileges enjoyed by the corporation, or what were its officers, is quite uncertain. Prior to the passing of the municipal act, the corporation—if it may be called one—consisted of twelve freemen and eighteen stallingers, under the title of “the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the borough of Sunderland,” the members of which were without jurisdiction or municipal authority. By the provisions of the Municipal Reform Bill the municipal borough of Sunderland consists of the parish of Sunderland, the townships of Monkwearmouth, Monkwearmouth Shore, Bishopwearmouth Pans, and part of Bishopwearmouth. Its population in 1851, was 63,897 souls. The municipal borough is divided into seven wards, termed respectively East Ward, Sunderland Ward, Bishopwearmouth Ward, Bridge Ward, St. Michael's Ward, West Ward, and Monkwearmouth Ward; and is governed by a mayor, fourteen aldermen, and forty-two councillors, under the usual corporate style. The revenues of the corporation are about £4,570 per annum.

Sunderland was enfranchised by the Reform Act, and now returns two members to parliament. The parliamentary borough consists of the parish of Sunderland, the townships of Bishopwearmouth and Bishopwearmouth Pans, in Bishopwearmouth parish, and the townships of Monkwearmouth, Monkwearmouth Shore, and Southwick, in Monkwearmouth parish. The population of the parliamentary borough in 1851 was 67,394 souls. The present members are George Hudson, Esq., and Henry Fenwick, Esq.

Petty Sessions for the borough are held in the Police Station, West Wear-street, daily, commencing at twelve o'clock. C. T. Potts, clerk to the magistrates. Petty sessions for the Sunderland division of Easington Ward are held here every Saturday. J. Kidson, clerk to the magistrates.

For corporation, magistrates, &c., see the end of the volume.

CHARITIES.—In addition to the almshouses, schools, &c., elsewhere described, Sunderland possesses the following benefactions, viz.:—Gray's Charity: The Rev. Robert Gray (afterwards Bishop of Bristol), in 1825 gave £30, the interest of which was to be paid yearly towards the salary of the master of the national school, erected in Bishopwearmouth in 1808. The money is lodged in the Bishopwearmouth Savings Bank, and the interest is applied as directed. Scurfield's Charity: On March 8th, 1819, Dorothy Scurfield, amongst other charities, bequeathed the sum of £1 1s. to be paid yearly to the mistress of Bishopwearmouth national school. The same person also left £1 1s. a year for the master of a small school at Hilton Ferry, in the township of Ford, in Monkwearmouth parish, and £2 2s. to the master of the school at Ryhope, in the same parish. Williamson's Charity: Dame Dorothy Williamson, who died November 4th, 1699, gave the following yearly sums, charged upon the Williamson estates in Monkwearmouth, to the poor of the different places, viz.:—North Wearmouth town, £1; North Wearmouth Shore, £3; Hylton, £1; Southwick, £1; Bishopwearmouth, £1; Sunderland, £2; and Fulwell, £1; total, £10.

WORTHIES.—John Emery, the celebrated actor, was a native of Sunderland, and was educated at Ecclesfield, in Yorkshire, where he doubtless acquired that knowledge of the dialect which obtained him so much celebrity. He may be said to have been born an actor, both his parents having followed the profession with some degree of provincial fame. In parts designedly written for him, he had no competitor; and Tyke (School of Reform), and Gies (Miller's Maid), in parts of which his acting was truly terrific and appalling, will long be remembered. Besides his histrionic powers, he was an excellent musician, a poet, and a painter, his drawings of coast scenery particularly being much admired, and when offered for sale brought high prices. He died in London, July 25th, 1822, aged 45 years.

Colonel John Lilburne, so conspicuous during the stormy period of the Commonwealth, was a native of Sunderland, where he was born in 1618. Being a younger son he was bred a clothier, but abandoned his profession in 1638, and became assistant to Dr. Bastwick. Under his direction he went to Holland, and superintended the printing of the Merry Liturgy, for which, and other presumed offences, he was, on his return, pilloried, whipped, fined, and loaded with irons, by order of the star chamber. In 1641, he was released by parliament, and becoming a distinguished soldier, he, in 1644, was advanced to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. His undaunted spirit in defence of liberty occasioned him many sufferings. From the confidant and secret friend of Cromwell, he became his accuser and enemy, when the former began to violate the principles which he had taken up arms to support. Firm and unbending in his politics, he was twice tried for high treason, but was acquitted. After his second trial he was ordered to leave the kingdom, but obtained permission to remain on his brother becoming security for his good behaviour. Hume represents him as the "most turbulent, but most upright and courageous of human kind," and Sir Henry Martin, as of such a contentious disposition that if there were none living but him, John would be against Lilburne, and Lilburne against John. He died at Eltham, in Kent, on the 29th August, 1657.

George Wilson Meadley, Esq., author of "Memoirs of Dr. Paley," "Memoirs of Algernon Sydney," &c., was born at Sunderland, on the 1st January, 1774. His principal education was received at Witton-le Wear, under the care of the Rev. John Farrer; and, being intended for commercial pursuits, he afterwards became apprentice to Mr. Chipchase, who carried on business as grocer, draper, and banker, in the city of Durham. During his apprenticeship he was occasionally employed in each department, and much disliked them all, employing his leisure hours in reading and in composition. He subsequently travelled on the continent, and visited Naples, Smyrna, and Constantinople.

bout this period he made the acquaintance of Dr. Paley, who had become resident rector of Bishopwearmouth, and enjoyed his friendship till his demise in 1805. In 1809, he published his "Memoirs of Paley," which was well received, and a new edition was speedily called for. This was followed, in 1813, by the "Memoirs of Algernon Sydney." Shortly afterwards he withdrew from the Established Church, and avowed himself a Unitarian in a "Letter to the Bishop of St. David's." He died at Bishopwearmouth, on November 28th, 1818, in his 45th year. His remains were followed to the grave by the president of the Sunderland Library (of which he was one of the founders), and a very large party of the subscribers and other gentlemen.

WEST RAINTON DISTRICT PARISH.

This parish, comprising the townships of Cocken, Moorhouse, Moorsley, East Rainton, and West Rainton, was formed from the parish of Houghton-le-Spring by an order in council, dated May 15th, 1888, and constituted a separate and distinct parish.

COCKEN township comprises an area of 437 acres, and its rateable value is 11. The population in 1801 was 17; in 1811, 59; in 1821, 59; in 1831, 71; in 1841, 65; and in 1851, 96 souls. William Standish, Esq., of Cocken Hall, is the sole proprietor and lord of the manor. This township is about five miles north-north-east of Durham, where the river Wear forms a most beautiful curve, and almost encloses Cocken Hall. Ælla, a priest, gave Cocken to the prior and monks of Durham, who afterwards exchanged it for land in Wolviston, and it subsequently passed to the priors of Finchale, under whom the Kibblesworths, Birtleys, and Lumleys, held the lands. At the dissolution of the religious houses, Cocken fell to the crown, and was afterwards held by various proprietors. Cocken Hall occupies an elevated situation, washed on three sides by the river, and towards the north is bounded by deep dells, filled with stately forest trees. In 1804, it was the residence of a community of Teresian nuns from Liere in Belgium; but in consequence of the opening of a colliery in the neighbourhood, they were removed to Field House, near Darlington, in 1830 (see page 356).

Directory.—William Standish Standish, Esq., Cocken Hall; and the owners are Edward Heslop, Cocken Boathouse; Thomas Proud, High Cocken; and William Proud, High Cocken.

MOORHOUSE is a small township, comprising an area of 272 acres, and its rateable value is £767. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 23; in 1811, 28; in 1821, 29; in 1831, 30; in 1841, 45; and in 1851, 49 souls. The principal landowners are the Marchioness of Londonderry, Martin, Esq., and Robert Donnison, Esq. The manorial rights are vested in the dean and chapter of Durham. This place was formerly the property of the Inglesbys, and afterwards of the Ropers.

The Hamlet of Moorhouse is about three-and-a-half miles north-east of Durham.

Directory.—James Heslop, overseer and farm bailiff; Matthew Ryle, land agent; and the farmers are David Coulson and Son, Woodside; and Matthew Ryle, Moorhouse.

MOORSLEY township contains 588 acres, and its rateable value is £1,943. The population in 1801 was 36; in 1811, 43; in 1821, 48; in 1831, in consequence of the extension of the collieries, 748; in 1841, 821; and in 1851, 942 souls. The principal proprietors here are the Marchioness of Londonderry, Thomas W. Robinson, Esq., Thomas Bellerby, and the North Hetton Coal Company. This township, whose ancient name was Moreslaw, was held by a family bearing the local name, one of whom, Adam Moreslaw, gave his lands to the Prior of Durham; and his son Helyas confirmed his father's donation, and abjured all right in his inheritance. There is a colliery which affords employment to many in the neighbourhood.

The Village of Moorsley is situated on an eminence, overlooking the vale of the Wear, about five-and-a-half miles east-north-east of Durham. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, erected by the North Hetton Coal Company in 1844; the lower part is used as a school for children of both sexes. William L. Cochrane and Jane Brown, teachers.

RAINTON EAST township comprises an area of 1,065 acres, and its rural value is £4,110. The population in 1801 was 294; in 1811, 455; in 1821, 671; in 1831, in consequence of the extension of the coal mines, it had increased to 1,600; in 1841 it was 1,414; and in 1851, 1,695 souls. There are several coal mines in this township and neighbourhood, which are principally the property of the Marchioness of Londonderry, and in which the greater portion of the inhabitants find employment. The manorial rights are vested in the dean and chapter of Durham. The landowners are the Marchioness of Londonderry, Mrs. Legge, the trustees of the Houghton-le-Spring Grammar School, the dean and chapter of Durham, Rev. R. Heaviside, Mr. Matthew Ryle, Mr. Warrick, Mr. Thomas Michison, Mr. Thomas Johnson, Mr. Philip Thompson, Mrs. Anne Wood, and the trustees of the late Sarah Surtees.

The Village of East Rainton is about five miles north-east of Durham. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, a small brick building, erected in 1823, and containing about 180 sittings. It is at present rented by Mr. John Peel, who occupies it as a day school.

Middle Rainton is a hamlet in this township, two miles south-west of Houghton-le-Spring.

RAINTON (West) township comprises an area of 1,788 acres, and its rateable value is £6,988. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 435; in 1811, 629; in 1821, in consequence of the extension of coal mines, 1,160; in 1831, 1,341; in 1841, 1,054; and in 1851, 1,509. There are several collieries in the township and neighbourhood, which afford employment to a considerable number of persons. The Marchioness of Londonderry is lady of the manor, principal landowner, as also the chief coal proprietor. Reynton, otherwise Rainton, was an ancient manor and park, belonging to the prior and convent of Durham; and, in 1508, Prior Thomas had a grant of free warren in Bishop Bainbrigg, after which the convent obtained many successive grants of lands, which, after the suppression of the monastic institutions, were allotted to the new cathedral.

The Village of West Rainton is about four miles north-east of Durham, and formerly contained a chapel, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin.

The Church is a small stone structure, erected in 1825, at a cost of £277 5s., and contains sittings for 500 persons, the whole of which are free and unappropriated. There is a handsome font of Bath stone, near the west door, and, on the south side of the church, there is a mural tablet to the memory of John Dunn, Esq., of Durham. Attached to the church is a spacious burial ground. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham; rector, Rev. Joseph Tiffin; curate, Rev. Thomas Lord.

Rainton National School is a plain stone building, erected in 1827, at an expense of £150, and will accommodate about fifty-six children. George Hodgson, teacher.

Here is also a handsome school of hewn stone, the front of which bears the following inscription:—"This edifice, erected in 1850, by Frances Anne Lane, Marchioness of Londonderry, as an encouragement to the colliers to promote the moral and religious education of their children; and as a lasting memorial of the interest she takes in their welfare." It is supported by the Marchioness, and is well attended. Attached to the schools are spacious playgrounds for the children. Thomas and Jane Houldsworth, teachers.

Rainton Pit Houses is a hamlet, about half-a-mile to the west of West Rainton.

CHESTER WARD.

This ward is bounded on the north and west by Northumberland, on the south-west by Darlington Ward, on the south and south-east by Durham and Easington Wards, and on the east by the German Ocean. It is divided into three divisions, East, Middle, and West, and is well watered by the rivers Tyne, Wear, Derwent, Dearness, and Browney, with their tributary streams. The aspect of the country is various, but the greater part is highly cultivated. Coal, lime, lead, and excellent stone, are abundant, and the banks of the rivers are crowded with extensive and important manufactories.

EAST DIVISION.

This division of Chester Ward comprises the parishes of Boldon, Gateshead, Gateshead Fell, Jarrow, Washington, and Whitburn, with the district parishes, or chapelries, of Hedworth, South Shields, and Usworth.

BOLDON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north and north west by Jarrow, on the west and south-west by Washington, on the south and south-east by Monkwearmouth, and on the east by Whitburn. It comprises the townships of East Boldon and West Boldon. From time immemorial, the whole manor of Boldon, including both villages, has belonged to the see of Durham, and gave name to an early survey of the palatinate compiled by order of Bishop Pudsey. In this record, mention is made of all the lands of the see, held by demesne or by tenants in villainage, taking no notice of tenants in capite by knight's service. The arrangement is alphabetical; and Boldon occurring first, gives name to the compilation; and when similar services occur in subsequent places, they are referred to the place first mentioned. The villains in this district formerly laboured under severe duties; for, besides having to work for the lord in the field, they rendered money payments at the bishop's chequer, and paid sixteenpence each for aver pennys, in lieu of royal wages — a service by horse and carriage for conveying the king's ammunition and baggage during war. They were obliged to labour for the lord three days every week, except at Easter, Whitsuntide, and thirteen days at Christmas; and amongst them they were obliged to build a house for the lord in his park. The cotmanni, or cottagers, wrought only two days a week for the lord. The whole of the villans had the privilege of setting up booths or stalls at the fairs of St. Cuthbert. The whole vill paid 17s. cornage, and provided a milch cow for the lord's household. The demesne lands were in farm, and rendered rent in grain or bread. The parish contains 3,954 acres. Its population in 1801 was 619; in 1811, 662; in 1821, 793; in 1831, 855; in 1841, 915; and in 1851, 1,008 souls.

EAST BOLDON township is principally held by Cuthbert Ellison, Esq., John Jenkinsopp, Esq., J. J. Browell, Esq., the Messrs. Clayton, Mrs. Hall, Mr. Charles Milner, Mr. W. Burdon, and several others. Its acreage, population, &c., are included in the parish returns. Scot's House, mentioned in Hatfield's survey, together with Gilbert Leazes, is a tenement on the high road, a mile to the west of Boldon, and formerly belonged to the Cole family, from whom it passed to the Millbankes. In 1658, it was transferred to Henry Maddison, gentleman, from whose successors it passed to the Hudson family. White Mare's Pool, to the north of Scot's House derives its name from the ancient Whitmerc, mentioned in records of the thirteenth century; the whole of the level country beneath the dry limestone hills of Boldon, must have once been, before drainage and enclosure, a wash of white water. Newton Garths is a freehold estate, one mile to the north of West Boldon, and was held, at the period of the compilation of the Boldon Book, by John Pannetarius for 20s. rent. It was afterwards held by the Newtons.

The Village of East Boldon is situated on the road from Sunderland to Gateshead, about half a mile from West Boldon. Here is a chapel-of-ease to the mother church.

WEST BOLDON township is principally held by Sir William Lawson, Thomas Wilkinson, Esq., R. H. Ridley, Esq., the Executors of the late William Cross, Esq., Thomas Wailes, Esq., and several copyholders. The acreage, population, &c., of this township, are included in the parish returns.

The Village of West Boldon is situated on a rocky eminence, on the high road to Newcastle, about four-and-a-half miles north-west of Sunderland. It contains a number of good houses, and has recently been much improved, in many respects. Many visitors from Newcastle and Sunderland come here during the summer months for the sake of the salubrity of the neighbourhood. From a station a little above the village, there is a varied and extensive prospect, commanding a view of Offerton, Biddick, Washington, Usworth, Jarrow, Shields, Tynemouth, and the rising grounds on the north bank of the Tyne.

The Church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a neat structure, of ancient date and architecture, but almost entirely modernised. It consists of nave, aisle, chancel, and western tower and spire, the latter has evidently been an addition to the old structure. There are galleries in the church, which also contains several monuments to the memory of various persons. In January, 1816, a stone coffin of the usual form was discovered about a foot below the surface immediately without the east wall of the chancel. It had no lid or inscription. The parish register commences in 1571.* The living is a rectory, valued in the Liber Regis at £24 18s. 4d.; gross income, £730. Patron, the Bishop of Durham: rector, Rev. John Collinson, M.A.; Rev. Edward Good, curate.

The Rectory is a handsome building, with an elegant stone front. The glebe, including the churchyard, contains about 170 acres.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here.

The Parochial School, in the patronage of the rector, was built in 1810, and in 1830 an apartment for girls was added. It is endowed with £200, left by the Rev. Henry Blackett, rector of Boldon, who died about the year 1808, the interest of which was to be applied to the education of eight poor children of the parish. From this legacy £20 was deducted for the duty, which was afterwards made up by the succeeding rector, and the amount laid out in the purchase of Five-per-cent Stock. There is now £200 New Four-per-Cents, and the dividends are paid to the master, who, in consideration thereof, instructs eight poor children. The present rector also gives £10 per annum towards the support of the school. There is a library here under the management of the curate of the parish. John Walker, teacher.

There is also, on the south side of the village, an excellent academy, which is efficiently conducted by Mr. John Pybus.

* The following singular license appears on the register of Bishop Tobias Mathew.—
TO THE RIGHT REV. FATHER IN GOD, TOBIE, BY GOD'S PROVIDENCE
BISHOP OF DURESM.

Forasmuch as by her Majties injunctions it is provided that no prieste nor minister shall take to his wyfe any manner of woman without the advice and allowance first had upon good examination by y<sup>e</sup> Bussshop of y<sup>e</sup> same Diocess and two Justices of the peace of the same shire dwelling next to the place where the same woman hath made her most abode before her marriage or without the good will of her parents, if she have any, or two of the next of her kinsfolk, or for lack of knowledge of such, or her master or mistress where she served. Now whereas wee are informed that Mr. Richard Fawcett, prieste Mr. of Artes, and parson of Boldon, by God's grace shall take to wyfe Eleanor Blaikeston, of Hedlie, in y<sup>e</sup> Cox Palatine of Durham, widow, wee therefore, whose names are subscribed, do signify unto your honour, that y<sup>e</sup> said Eleanor is known to our knowledge hath been, of honest conversation and vertuous lyfe, without being detected defamed, or suspected of any notorious crimes or evil demeanour, but embracing God's true and sincere religion now established, and, as wee are informed, free from all contracts, or any impediments canonical; and for testimony and witness that y<sup>e</sup> premises be true, we have hereunto subscribed our names, y<sup>e</sup> xxth day of January, 1597.

Sic subscrip. Jo. Hedworth
Et sic etiam subscrip. Rich. Bellase.

I am content to allow of this marriage betwixt Mr. Fawcett and Mrs. Blaikeston, and wisheth God to bless them, do require that y<sup>e</sup> same be solemnized according to y<sup>e</sup> laws, statutes and injunctions of this realm and Church of England in like case provided.

Tobie Duresm.

8 Februarie 1597.

Charities.—Ralph Harrison, in March, 1687, left £100 to the poor of the parish of Boldon, to be put out for their use by the head men of the parish. He also left a similar sum to the poor of the parishes of Whickham, Ryton, Gateshead, and Chester, and the chapelry of Tanfield, and £50 to the chapelry of Lamesley; and he directed that no minister or preacher should have any hand in the ordering or distribution of the said monies, but only the head men of the several parishes and chapelries. The money was lent, in 1781, by the rector and overseers, as appointed by the deed, to certain proprietors of land and two mills in the parish; and out of the rent of these lands and mills, the sum of £5 17s. 6d. is paid yearly to the churchwardens, as the interest of the money invested. This sum is divided amongst the poor at Christmas and Easter, in sums varying from 1s. to 7s. John Stephenson, by will, dated 9th May, 1759, directed his executor to distribute yearly on the 25th December, to eight poor persons, having legal settlements in the parish, 5s. each; and to carry out this charity for ever, he directed his executors to charge a house in Westgate-street, Newcastle, with the annual sum of £10. The yearly sum of £2 is paid by the owner of the house designated, and is divided by the churchwardens, every Christmas, amongst eight poor persons, appointed by them with the approbation of the rector.

GATESHEAD PARISH.

GATESHEAD is a parish and a corporate and parliamentary borough, about 14 miles north of the city of Durham, and 272 miles north-west of London. The parish contains an area of 8,255 acres; and its population in 1801 was 8,597; in 1811, 8,782; in 1821, 11,767; in 1831, 15,177; in 1841, it had increased to 19,505; and in 1851, it had attained to 25,568 souls. The extensive and elevated tract of ground called Gateshead Fell, was formerly part of the parish of Gateshead, under which all the returns are included, but although it was made a distinct parish and rectory in 1808, it was provided by the act of parliament which made the division, "that nothing in this act contained shall alter or affect the manor of Gateshead, or the division of the said parish into townships, or separate districts, for the maintenance of the poor, or for any civil purpose whatever, but that the said manor and parish of Gateshead shall, as to those purposes, remain in all respects the same as if this act had not passed." Here are the celebrated "Newcastle Grindstone" quarries, and several collieries.

THE TOWN of Gateshead is situated on the south bank of the Tyne, with which it is connected by means of the Tyne Bridge, and the beautiful and unique High Level Bridge. Gateshead is more formidable in respect to steepness than its opposite neighbour, Newcastle. The ascent from the river's bank is no less than 500 feet in two miles, and some of the streets leading from the old railway station to the bridge, are such as horses and drivers regard with an anxious eye. From this station, or from any contiguous spot, the view over the two towns is very striking; the river, the shipping, the coal-keels, the factories, the glass-works, the pottery-works, the lofty chimneys, the steeples, the new railway bridge—that grandest of features in the town—all combine to form a scene of great activity and interest. Gateshead consists of only one good and wide street on the high road to the north. The several narrow streets and lanes which compose the remainder, branch off on each side the principal or High-street. Bottle-bank is a street descending precipitately from the High-street towards the bridge, but since the formation of Church-street, which passes down the side of the hill in a curved course, carriages avoid this steep descent. Although many of the old houses have been re-built or modernised, and several streets formed since the commencement of the present century, there is little appearance of wealth, or of houses belonging to the richer class. The town is densely peopled with families of artisans and pitmen, whilst the master manufacturers, and proprietors of coal pits within the borough, reside in Newcastle, or in the vicinity of the High and Low Fell, which are hamlets in the southern and rural districts of the parish. Many of the close alleys and fever-dens of Gateshead have been swept away by the late fire and explosion, and it is to be hoped that their sites will be occupied by spacious thoroughfares and improved dwellings.

The derivation of the name Gateshead, has long been a matter of doubt and dispute with antiquaries. Camden and others supposed that the Gabrosentum of the Notitia was here; and Stukely, after finding the place called Ad Capræ Caput by Bede, and seeing a goat's head used as a sign, found that Gabrosentum in British signified Goat's head. Simeon of Durham, speaking of the murder of Bishop Walcher, says it happened at Ad Capræ Caput, which he also terms Gateshead. Some think that because a branch of the Watling Street ended here, it was called Gates-head, or End; gate in ancient as in modern times, signifying a street or road.

From the proximity of this town to Newcastle, its history is closely interwoven with the annals of that place, hence the most remarkable events which have transpired here, will be found in the historical notice of that town. With regard to the foundation of Gateshead we possess no authentic information, and to enter into the various conjectures which have been formed by antiquaries, is foreign to our purpose. That it was a town prior to the year 1164, we have ample evidence in the charter granted by Bishop Pudsey to the inhabitants of Gateshead, in which, under certain restrictions, they are allowed the liberty of his forest there. By the same charter the bishop granted to the inhabitants, equal privileges to those enjoyed by the people of Newcastle; and he also granted them free passage with their goods through his county palatine, free of all dues and exactions,

The most material circumstance for which we find Gateshead noted in ancient history, is touching the catastrophe related of Bishop Walcher, when, on the 14th May, 1080, the church was reduced to ashes. The earldom of Northumberland had been given, after the condemnation of Waltheof, to Walcher, a native of Lorraine, who had been lately raised to the see of Durham. The bishop was of a mild and easy disposition, his humanity revolted from the idea of oppressing the inhabitants himself, but his indolence prevented him from seeing or restraining the oppressions of his officers. Liulf, a noble Englishman, had ventured to accuse them before the prelate, and in the course of a few days he was slain. Walcher, to allay the ferment, declared his innocence of the homicide, compelled the murderers to offer the legal compensation, and engaged to act as mediator between them and the relatives of Liulf. Both parties met by agreement at Gateshead, but the bishop, perceiving indications of violence amongst the natives, retired into the church, which was immediately set on fire by the infuriated people. He compelled the murderers to go out, but they were immediately slain. At length, unable to bear the violence of the flames, he wrapped his mantle round his head, and appeared at the door. A voice immediately exclaimed, "Good rede, short rede. slay ye the bishop!" and he fell pierced with a number of wounds. His death was not sufficient to appease their revenge, for they mangled and insulted his body, which was found naked on the spot by the monks of Jarrow, who conveyed it by water, first to their own monastery, and subsequently to Durham, where it was privately buried in the cathedral.

In the reign of Edward VI. Gateshead was separated from the possessions of the Bishop of Durham, and annexed to Newcastle, but was subsequently restored to its original proprietor. Bishop Skirlaw, in 1553, granted to the corporation of Newcastle a tract of land lying to the east of Gateshead, and known by the name of the "Salt Meadows," and in a short time afterwards, Bishop Barnes let to Queen Elizabeth, for a term of ninety-nine years, the manors of Gateshead and Whickham, which lease was subsequently transferred to the corporation of Newcastle. On its reversion to the see of Durham in 1716, the park and manor of Gateshead were granted on a twenty-one years' lease, renewable every year, at the annual rent of £285 11s. 4d. to W. Coatsworth, Esq., from whom the lease has descended to Cuthbert Ellison, Esq., of Hebburn Hall, the present proprietor.

The freehold property denominated the "Borough Lands," which are vested in the "borough-holders" and freemen, cannot be traced to its original possessors. We find, that in 1557, the burgesses were in possession of Windmill Hill, Longflatt, and Stoneflatt, and that shortly afterwards they litigated their common right in Redheugh and Harelaw, with the Whites of Redheugh. There is a decree of Queen Elizabeth, which recognises the right of pasture in the "Town Fields," and we find cows pastured there in 1607. By an act of parliament obtained in 1814, power was granted to enclose and divide certain portions of borough-lands, or town-fields. The quantity divided according to the proportion of borough tenure and common right, amounted to 157 acres. A certain portion of the land was reserved under the authority of the act; it contained about ten acres, and, with the buildings upon it, constituted the property of the borough-holders and freemen, whose number at present is very limited.

In December 1831, the cholera commenced its ravages in Newcastle and Gateshead, from which time, up to March 1832, it had carried away 544 persons. The two towns were again visited by this dreadful scourge in 1849, and in 1853 they experienced a third visitation, when 1,920 persons became its victims.

A dreadful fire took place at Gateshead on the morning of the 6th October 1854. It broke out on the premises of a worsted factory in the vicinity of Hillgate, and the flames soon spread to the neighbouring buildings, in which great quantities of sulphur, lead, and tallow had been stored. Large numbers of persons were everywhere engaged in endeavouring to arrest the progress of the destructive element, and as the flames reached the bonded warehouses their activity and anxiety were redoubled. A detachment of military, fifty strong, hastened down with their barrack engine to assist those already at work, and other aid was telegraphed for. A slight concussion warned the gathering crowd that there was something more perilous than sulphur in the burning pile; but it was naturally supposed that with the shock the danger had ceased. A few minutes later the misinterpreted warning received a terrible fulfilment. The air was rent as with the voice of many thunders, and filled, as if with the spume of a volcano. Massive walls were crumbled into heaps, blocks of houses tumbled into ruins, windows shattered from their frames far and near, and a shower of burning timbers and crashing stones rained terror, death, and fresh destruction on every side. Of the fifty soldiers advancing with their engine, thirty were struck down—two of them dead, and one with an iron rail driven into his body. Firemen and helping citizens were crushed where they stood. Some, looking on in helpless amazement, were, in a moment, stricken beyond consciousness. Some perished under their own roofs, while others fell beneath the descending fragments. The wreck, &c. in Gateshead, may be described in the following manner:—First, at the east end of Hillgate, and forming the limit of the eruption, was the well-known vinegar manufactory of Messrs. Singers, which was totally demolished; while proceeding from this point up the quay, a range of houses, followed by the exploded bond warehouses, Messrs. Carr's timber yard, Messrs. Wilson's worsted manufactory, and lastly, the engine manufactory of Mr. Bulcraig, this latter place forming the western limit. Running parallel with these premises, but on the opposite side of Hillgate, commencing with the shop of Mr. Lumsden, grocer, was a large cluster of houses, while the large flour mill of Mr. Davison was closely contiguous. These from their proximity to the worsted mill and bonded warehouses, received the full force of the concussion, and were totally destroyed. The houses in Church-walk were also entirely demolished. A short way beyond Bulcraig's engine works another disastrous scene presented itself. The property at this place formed the left side of Bridge-street, from Tyne Bridge up to Hillgate, and, as the back of these premises consisted of numerous factories, nothing could describe their bulged and tottering condition more forcibly than comparing them to having been subjected to some heavy cannonade, while the valuable commodities within them were laid waste by the same ruinous process. The whole of Cannon-street, on the south side of St. Mary's Churchyard, was from end to end a mass of ruins. The ruins on Newcastle Quay extended from the Sand Hill to the Custom house, and reached almost as far back as Butcher-bank. In the foreground, there was, as at Gateshead, little to meet the eye but a mass of blackened rubbish, but, further back, portions of houses were left standing in all manner of attitudes. Here a gable stood alone—there a house was cut a section, and presented to the spectator all the domestic arrangements which the unfortunate inmates had made before the catastrophe overtook them. Some parts one end of a house had fallen, leaving the roof half supported that which still stood, while others were all but utterly demolished. The number of killed and wounded amounted to upwards of 270 persons, of whom twenty-five were killed in Gateshead, on the spot, and five in Newcastle—three died subsequently in Gateshead, and ten in the Newcastle Infirmary—the remainder were all more or less injured. The value of the property destroyed was more than £1,000,000.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St. Mary, is so old that the date of its erection is entirely unknown, but we find it mentioned as early as the year 91, at which period the living was worth £13 6s. 8d. per annum. It is a uniform structure, and from the shape and hewn work of the stones, appears to have been constructed from the ruins of some Roman edifice. Within the last century this venerable structure has undergone extensive alterations and repairs, the tower and a portion of the nave have been rebuilt, the spires taken down, and the roof altered. The church possesses accommodation for upwards of 1,000 persons. There were formerly at least four chantries in this church. St. Mary's Chantry, in the north porch, was founded by Allan Prestre, in 1330, "to find a priest for the maintenance of God's service, and to pray for his soul, and for all Christian souls." Its yearly value at the time of the dissolution was £3 15s. 4d. St. John's Chantry was founded by John Dolphanby before the year 1442. Trinity Chantry, founded by Alan Prestre, had a yearly revenue of £4 12s. 2d. St. Loy's Chantry was founded by John Dolphanby in 1421; and its revenues at the dissolution amounted to £6 12s. 8d. The parish register commences in 1559. The living is a rectory, rated at £27 13s. 4d.; gross income, £750. Patron, the Bishop of Durham. Such was the state of this ancient edifice; but it suffered considerably from the effects of the explosion, which took place in its neighbourhood, on the 6th October, 1854. Not a window was left in the church, and the whole structure was so seriously injured, that at one period it was contemplated to abandon it, and construct a new church on a more convenient site. After due consideration and a public meeting, the sacred associations which belonged to the old edifice so far influenced the parishioners, that it was resolved to restore it to its pristine condition, so far as it could be accomplished, and, under the direction of John Dobson, Esq., the architect, the church has not only been thoroughly repaired and restored but several judicious alterations and improvements effected. The chancel especially, which was almost blown down, has been entirely restored, and, in doing so, the original design has been closely followed, except that the heavy and low arch which divided the transept from the church has been heightened several feet, by which a greater degree of light has been thrown into it. At the communion table is a beautiful memorial window of stained glass, by Mr. Wailes, of Newcastle. It has five lights. The centre light is occupied with a figure of our Saviour, with his words beneath—"I am the resurrection and the life." On the right are the evangelists Matthew and Mark, and on the left Luke and John. The three large medallions in the tracery are devoted to the Baptism, the Supper, and the Resurrection. In the two smaller medallions are inserted the Royal Arms and the arms of Gateshead—the latter being accompanied by the modern motto—"Caput inter nubila condit." At the front of this window, under the principal figures, are angels bearing scrolls, inscribed—"In the midst of life we are in death. — Of whom may we seek for succour — But of Thee, O Lord—Who for our sins are justly displeased." Also, a representation of the fall of the tower of Siloam, with the words—"Think ye that they were sinners above all men in Jerusalem? I tell ye nay, but except ye repent ye shall likewise perish." Then we have the record of the visitation, which is as follows—"This window was erected in commemoration of an awful fire and explosion which occurred in this parish on the morning of Friday, October 6th, 1834. By this fearful calamity more than fifty persons lost their lives, a great many others were seriously injured, many houses were burnt and others completely demolished, and this church was very extensively damaged." In addition to this, it is in contemplation to place two other memorial windows in the church—one by a townsman, the other by the parents of Ensign Paynter, who perished in the discharge of his duty on the awful morning of October 6th. The estimated cost of the repairs, alterations, &c., was £1,255. Rector, Rev. John Davies, D.D.; curates, Rev. A. L. Herbert, Rev. F. G. Holmes and Rev. William Bennett.

Trinity Chapel.—This ancient structure, supposed to have been erected previous to 1207, is situated in High-street. After the confiscation of the property of the monastic establishments, it became the property of the ancient Northumbrian family of Riddell, whose mansion house, which stood adjacent, suffered severely from the Scots under Leslie, and being the residence of a Catholic family, was plundered and set on fire by a Protestant mob in 1740. This chapel, which seems to have fallen into disuse after the unions of the hospitals of the Holy Trinity and St. Edmund in 1248, shared the violence of the mob, and remained a ruin until the year 1836, when Cuthbert Ellison, Esq., lord of the manor, gave the ground and building, as also a site for the erection of schools, to the rector and churchwardens of Gateshead. In consequence of this gift, a public subscription was commenced, which realised a sufficient sum for the repair of the venerable edifice and the erection of the schools. The chapel was opened for worship, according to the rites of the Church of England, in 1837. The eastern window contains the armorial bearings of many of the subscribers, beautifully executed in stained glass, by Mr. Wailes, of Newcastle. The Rev. Thomas Speck is the present chaplain.

St. Edmund's Chapel, High-street, was erected by subscription in 1803, at a cost of £1,331. There was formerly but one service at this chapel on Sundays, but during the repairs of the parish church there were three services. Rev. William Bennett, chaplain.

Bethesda Chapel.—This building, the property of the Methodist New Connexion, is situated between Brunswick-terrace and Melbourne-street. It is a fine commodious brick building, with a stone portico, and possesses sufficient accommodation for 970 persons. The basement storey serves as a school.

The Presbyterian Chapel, situated at the head of Melbourne-street, was erected in 1830, by a congregation of Independents, from whom it was transferred to the present occupants. It is a commodious edifice, with school room, &c., attached, and is seated for 640 persons. The Rev. T. K. Knox is the present minister.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel, in West-street, is a small structure, possessing sittings for about eighty persons. There is also another chapel belonging to the same body in Nelson-street.

The Wesleyan Chapel, situated in High-street, is a fine commodious structure, erected in 1815, and will accommodate 670 persons. There is a vestry and itable school-rooms adjoining the chapel. There is another Wesleyan chapel Pipewellgate, which will seat about 165 persons.

The Anchorage School.—This establishment is said to derive its name from the dues for anchorage in the Tyne having been originally appropriated to its support. It occupies apartments over the vestries of St. Mary's Church, and has an endowment of £12 per annum, bequeathed by Dr. Pickering, rector of Gateshead, in 1701. For this endowment the master teaches fifteen boys, at a reduced charge of one shilling a quarter, these boys being nominated by the rector of Gateshead for the time being. According to the deed of foundation, the boys are to be taught "the Latin and Greek tongues, as well as to write and cast up accounts, and the art of navigation or plain sailing." In addition to these, English grammar, geography, and mathematics, form a part of the course of instruction. The Rev. W. Bennett is the present master.

The Ellison Schools adjoin the Trinity Chapel, High-street, and were erected by subscription in 1838. They comprise schools for infants and boys; the former occupying the ground-floor, and the latter the first-floor of the building. John Cranston and Martha Carr, teachers.

The National Schools are situated in Ellison-terrace, and occupy a fine stone building, which was erected in 1842, at a cost of £907, exclusive of the site. This establishment comprises separate schools for boys and girls, class-rooms, &c., which are well adapted for the purposes to which they are applied. Wm. Clifford and Miss Clifford, teachers.—There are several other schools, both public and private, for which see Academies and Schools in the Directory.

St. Edmund's, or King James's Hospital.—The religious institutions which flourished at Monkchester—see Newcastle—no doubt gave rise to those on the south side of the Tyne. Amongst these was the chapel or hospital of St. Edmund, king and martyr, now called King James's Hospital. Tanner informs us that one Uttan was abbot of a monastery here prior to 653, but the date of its foundation and the name of its founder are alike unknown. It appears to have been converted into an hospital some time before the dissolution of the religious houses by Henry VIII., for Leland says, "whereas the hospital of St. Edmund, of Gateshead, in Wyrle, was some time a monastery, as I have heard, and be lykelyhood the same that Bede speakythe of." Its annual value is stated in Dugdale's Monasticon, at £5 9s. 4d.; but according to Speed, at £109 4s. 4d. Although the ancient history of St. Edmund's Hospital is involved in obscurity, it is certain that Bishop Farnham, in 1248, annexed to it the chapel and the hospital of the Holy Trinity, and amongst the numerous charters respecting this institution, carefully preserved in Gateshead vestry, is one dated 28th of April, 1485, in which this latter is styled "the chantry of the Holy Trinity in the Hospital of St. Edmund." Bishop Farnham endowed it with several estates in the neighbourhood, and gave to it a charter in which it is recited that the establishment should consist of four priests, one of whom was to be master, but was to eat at the same table, &c., as the rest of the brethren. After the dissolution this establishment became the property of the crown, by whom masters were regularly appointed, but the charters having been afterwards lost, and the revenues partly converted to purposes of private emolument, it was refounded by James I. in 1610. The new society was ordered to consist of a master, who should always be the rector of Gateshead for the time being, and of three poor brethren. In 1810 an act of parliament was passed, which empowered the master and brethren to let leases of their property, in parcels not exceeding one acre, for a term of not exceeding ninety-nine years, and by the provisions of the said act the number of brethren was increased to thirteen, ten of whom are styled younger brethren. Each of the elder, or ancient brethren, receives £25 per annum, a suit of clothes, a house to live in, and an allowance for coals. The ten younger brethren must be single men, fifty-six years of age, or upwards, of good character, and not possessing more than £20 a year. They each receive £12 per annum, and a suit of clothes every two years. A salary of £10 per annum is paid to the chaplain, who officiates in St. Edmund's Chapel. The whole of the appointments are made by the rector of Gateshead, as master of the hospital, usually from inhabitants of Gateshead. The ancient brethren reside in houses, built about the year 1818, on lands belonging to the hospital. The revenues derived from lands and mines, amounted at the time of the Charity Commissioners' report, to £525 17s. per annum.

The Gateshead Dispensary, established in 1832, is situated in West-street, and is solely supported by public subscriptions and donations. Prior to the year just mentioned, this town had provided no relief, of a medical character, for the poor, but immediately after the visitation of the cholera at that period this praiseworthy institution was established, and well and efficiently has it done its work. Did we need anything to prove its efficiency, we have only to allude to the facility with which the sufferers at the late disastrous conflagration were relieved, and their wants attended to. It is in contemplation to erect a new and more suitable building as soon as the requisite funds can be obtained. The total number of persons who have received the benefit of this institution since its commencement in 1832, is upwards of 100,000. T. W. Craster, house surgeon.

The Town Hall is situated in Half Moon-lane, near the south end of the High Level Bridge. It contains a spacious Council Chamber, Police Court, and the various corporate offices, as also the County Court for the Gateshead District.

The Mechanics' Institution.—This institution, situated in West-street, was first established in 1837, and in 1846 a public subscription was commenced for a new building, which was completed and opened in 1848, at a cost of £1,372. The expense of the site for this building was contributed by Cuthbert Ellison, Esq. The establishment contains, on the first-floor, a spacious hall, in which lectures are occasionally delivered, and on the ground-floor is the library, with a residence for the librarian. The library contains about 3,200 volumes, besides the various metropolitan and local newspapers, periodicals, &c. Richard Cooke, librarian. There is also a Literary Institute in West-street.

Gateshead Post Office is situated in Tyne-lane, and was first established in 1771. A statement of the arrival and departure of the several mails will be found prefixed to the Directory.

The York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Station, Half Moon-lane, was erected in 1844, as a station for the Darlington Junction Railway, and was formerly used for the Brandling Junction Railway. Richard Alison, stationmaster.

Gateshead Baths and Laundries occupy a handsome building, in the Elizabethan style, situated in Oakwellgate, and were opened for the use of the public on February 7th, 1855. They comprise warm, vapour, and shower baths, washing departments, &c., and are under the superintendence of a committee of the town council. William Chipchase, superintendent.

The Gateshead Poor Law Union comprehends twelve parishes and townships, including an area of 25,493 acres, and a population in 1851 of 8,081 souls. The parishes and townships are Chopwell, Crawcrook, Fell, Gateshead with Gateshead Fell, Heworth, Lowside, Stella, Swalwell, Ryton Woodside, Whickham, Winlaton. The board of guardians meets quarterly at the Workhouse, and every alternate Tuesday at the Register Office, West-street, at two o'clock p.m. Cornelius Garbutt, chairman; J. W. Swinburne, clerk. The Union Workhouse is situated in Lion-lane. Arthur Main, master; Eliza Main, matron; R. H. Wilson, surgeon; and — Struthers, teacher.

Manufactures and Trade.—Gateshead is progressively and rapidly increasing in importance as a manufacturing district. There are extensive manufactories of chain-cables, with numerous brass and iron foundries, and glass-houses, several of which are very extensive. There are also other manufactories of different kinds. Upwards of 500 persons are engaged in the manufacture of glass bottles alone. There are extensive collieries within the borough, and on Gateshead Fell are situated the great Grindstone quarries, whence Newcastle is said to have derived all its commercial fame for "Newcastle grindstones," which are exported to every part of the globe. The late terrific explosion having destroyed a great amount of property in the vicinity of the Tyne, it is purposed by the corporation to purchase the several buildings extending along the river, from the High Level Bridge in Pipe-gate, on the west, to the North Eastern Railway Drops, in Hillgate, on the east, and on their site to form quays or wharfs, with the requisite buildings, &c.

Government and Franchise.—From the earliest period of its records till the year 1615, Gateshead was governed by a bailiff appointed by the Bishop of Durham. Since that year and previous to the passing of the new municipal act, it was governed by two stewards, chosen by the borough-holders and free men, but they exercised no jurisdiction or municipal authority over the borough and received no tolls or dues of any kind within it. There is no charter in existence, but a belief exists that the borough was once incorporated, and some faint traces of corporate titles, offices, and customs; a common seal, and considerable borough property descending in perpetuity. The ancient deeds and papers deposited in a chest kept by the stewards, were surreptitiously removed many years ago, but one of the remaining documents, bearing the date 1696, contains allusions to the "town and borough of Gateshead," and to a grant made by Queen Elizabeth, "of Bensham and Harps-Head to the town and borough of Gateshead." Bishops Cosin and Tunstall, and Oliver Cromwell, incorporated a number of trading companies here, but they have almost all become extinct. By the Municipal Corporations Act, the borough was divided into three wards, called respectively East, West, and South Wards, and incorporated under the style of "The Borough-holders and Freemen of the borough of Gateshead." Six aldermen and eighteen councillors were appointed for its government, and a commission of the peace was also granted to it. The borough of Gateshead consists of the parish of Gateshead, and part of the chapelry of Heworth in the parish of Jarrow, containing in 1851, 763 inhabitants. This borough was also enfranchised by the Reform Act, and now returns one member to the imperial parliament. The boundaries of the municipal and parliamentary boroughs are coincident. William Hutt, Esq., is the present member. Gateshead is included in the Newcastle County Court Circuit. The days upon which the court are held will be found in our notice of that place at a subsequent page.

Barrington Place is a hamlet in Gateshead parish, situated about three-fourths of a mile south of Tyne Bridge.

Bensham is also a hamlet in the same parish, one-and-a-half mile south-west of Gateshead. Here is a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, which was erected in 1844, and is attended by the clergymen of the mother church. It is situated at the angle formed by the road leading down to Bensham, with the Hexham turnpike road. In connection with this church a school has been erected, called Lady Vernon's School, which is under the patronage of the rector of the parish, and conducted by Charles and Elizabeth Wood. There is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel at Low Bensham, and one belonging to the Wesleyan New Connexion at Mount Pleasant. Here is also a Lunatic Asylum, which is handsomely situated on the south side of the Windmill Hills. Paul Glenton, surgeon.

Teams is another hamlet in this parish, situated about two miles west of Gateshead, and contains a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodist New Connexion.

GATESHEAD FELL PARISH.

On the passing of the act of parliament, in the year 1800, for the division of the common, called Gateshead Fell, another act was also passed in the same year, for making this district a distinct and separate parish or rectory. One acre of land was allotted for the site of a church and churchyard; and twelve trustees were appointed, who were authorised to raise a sum not exceeding £1000, by rates upon the occupiers of lands, houses, and mines, within the district, at the expiration of seven years from the passing of the act. The right of presentation was reserved to the Bishop of Durham; and all tithes and ecclesiastical fees within the new parish were rendered payable to the parson of Gateshead.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St. John, was erected in 1825, at a cost of £3,339, and is a neat, plain Gothic structure, with a steeple 148 feet in height. It comprises nave, chancel, and aisles, and contains 1,000 sittings, five of which are free and unappropriated. The church contains several handsome mural monuments. The living is a rectory in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham; gross income, £194. Rev. William Atkinson, rector.

Here are chapels belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists and the Wesleyan New Connexion.

Carr's Hill is a village, pleasantly situated in Upper Heworth and Gateshead townships, one-and-a-half mile south-by-east of Gateshead.

Gateshead High Fell is about two-and-a-half miles, and Gateshead Low Fell, two-and-a-quarter miles, south of Tyne Bridge. At Low Fell, there is a Methodist New Connexion Chapel, and one belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. There is also a public school, library, and lecture room.

Sheriff Hill is about two miles south of Gateshead, and derives its name from the custom which formerly prevailed of the sheriff of Newcastle coming to this place to meet the justices itinerant. Here is the parish church, and places of worship belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Wesleyan New Connexion. Sheriff Hill Lunatic Asylum is pleasantly situated on an eminence, about two-and-a-half miles south of Gateshead, from which a fine prospect of Ravensworth and its vicinity may be obtained. Samuel Kent, proprietor; Benjamin Barkers, M.D., physician.

Wrekenton is a village in this parish, about three-and-a-quarter miles south of Gateshead, and derives its name from the Wreken Dyke, which divides this place from Ayton Banks. Here is a chapel-of-ease to the parish church, and chapels belonging to the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. There are also the Barrington and the National Schools, and a library and reading-room. Wrekenton Lunatic Asylum, is beautifully situated, and commands extensive views of the surrounding country. Messrs. Gowland and Smiles, proprietors; Robert Davies, physician.

For Directory, &c., of this parish, see Gateshead.

HEWORTH DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish was formed from the parish of Jarrow by an order in council, dated February 24th, 1843, and comprises the township of Heworth, which includes the villages of Heworth Upper, Heworth Nether, Heworth Shore, Felling High, Felling Low, Felling Shore, and Windy Nook. The area of the parish is 2,853 acres, and its rateable value, £2,078. Here are numerous and extensive collieries, stone quarries, chemical works, ship-building yards, &c. The population of the parish in 1801 was 2,887; in 1821, 2,905; in 1821, 3,921; in 1831, 5,424; in 1841, 7,008; and in 1851, 8,869. This increase in the number of inhabitants is attributed to the opening of new collieries, and the establishment of manufactories.

Felling (High) is a village in the same township, two miles south-east of Gateshead, and a little to the south of Low Felling. The Independent Methodist New Connexion, Primitive Methodists, Wesleyans, and Wesleyan Reformers, have places of worship here.

Felling (Low) is also a village in Heworth township, situated about two miles east-by-south of Newcastle, where there are extensive chemical works and other manufactories. Here is a Catholic Church, dedicated to St. Patrick, which has recently been considerably enlarged, and otherwise improved. Rev. John Kelly, priest. There is a school here belonging to the chemical works, a railway station, and a police station.

Felling Shore is a populous village, two-and-a-half miles east of Gateshead, possessing quays for shipping grindstones, and several manufactories, chemical works, &c.; many excellent vessels have been built at this place. There are chapels here belonging to the Methodist New Connexion, and the Wesleyan Methodists.

Heworth (Nether) is situated about two-and-three-quarter miles east-south-east of Newcastle. The Church is a handsome stone structure, in the Gothic style, erected in 1822, upon the site of a previous edifice, whose antiquity was probably not much inferior to that of Jarrow. The church cost upwards of £2,000, and contains 1,400 sittings, 620 of which are free. The whole of the interior is plain, neat, and comfortable; and there are a few mural monuments. In the burial ground attached to this church, is a monumental stone, commemorating a dreadful accident which occurred at Felling Colliery, in May 1812, when ninety-one persons were killed by an explosion of fire damp. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued at £190 per annum, and is in the patronage of Sir William Clavering, Bart., Cuthbert Ellis, Esq., and Thomas D. Brown, Esq. Rev. Matthew Plummer, B.A., incumbent; Rev. Samuel P. Hill, B.A., curate. The parish school is conducted by Mr. William Archer.

Heworth (Upper) is a village, situated about three quarters of a mile south of Heworth Nether, and contains a few scattered houses, commanding an extensive view of the river Tyne.

Heworth Shore is, as its name implies, on the banks of the river, two-and-a-half miles east-by-south of Gateshead, adjoining Felling Shore on the west. Here are numerous manufactories of various kinds, which afford employment to a considerable number of persons. There is a Primitive Methodist Chapel at Heworth lane.

Pelaw Main is a hamlet, in the township of Heworth, four miles east of Gateshead, on the West of Hebburn Quay.

Windy Nook is a village, in this township, about two-and-three-quarters south-east of Gateshead, and is chiefly inhabited by the workmen employed in the neighbourhood. Here is a chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. Alban, proto-martyr of Britain. It is a neat structure, in the early English style, and contains 300 sittings, the whole of which are free and unappropriated. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the incumbent of Heworth, and worth about £150 per annum. Rev. Edward Hussey Adams, M.A., perpetual curate. A neat parsonage house has been recently sted, at a cost of £900. The Methodist New Connexion have a chapel e, and there is also a school attached to the chapel-of-ease.

JARROW PARISH.

This parish includes the townships of Hedworth, Jarrow, and Monkton, whose united area is 2,826 acres, and rateable value £10,320. The population in 1801 was 1,508; in 1811, 3,193; in 1821, 8,530; in 1831, 9,598; in 1841, 9,600; and in 1851, 9,835 souls. The principal proprietors here are Cuthbert Ellison, Esq., T. D. Brown, Esq., William Snowball, Esq., Edward Pattison, Esq., Viscount Boyne, Mrs. Collins, George Blenkinsopp, Esq., Rev. Benjamin Kennicott, S. Atkinson, Esq., G. T. Blenkinsopp, Esq., Robert Ingham, Esq., M.P., the Executors of the late Peter Dale, Esq., Timothy Potts, Esq., William Barrass, Esq., H. Russell, Esq., Edward Wade, Esq., and George Metcalf, Esq. This parish contains large iron and other shipbuilding establishments, chemical works, coke-ovens, fire and other brick works, salt manufactories, &c., in which great numbers of the inhabitants are employed.

HEDWORTH is a joint township with Monkton and Jarrow; its acreage, population, &c., are included in the parish returns. The vill of Hedworth was anciently held by a family bearing the local name; but, in process of time, it became vested in the convent of Durham, and after the suppression of the monastic institutions, became the property of various proprietors.

The Village of Hedworth is situated about six miles east-by-south of Newcastle, in the vicinity of a brook to which it gives name, and which is here crossed by a bridge.

JARROW is a joint township with Hedworth and Monkton, in the parish of the same name, with the returns of which its population, &c., are included. The manor of Jarrow was granted by the crown, in 1544, to William, Lord Eure, of Witton, in whose family it remained till 1697, when it was conveyed to Henry Gibb, Esq. It afterwards passed to the Bonners and Ellisons; and is now held by various proprietors.

The Village of Jarrow is pleasantly situated, on the south side of the Tyne, at the point where that river expands, and forms Jarrow Slake, three miles south-west by west of South Shields. Jarrow claims the honour of remote antiquity, and is supposed to occupy the site of a Roman station, fort, or village. This opinion has been strengthened by the discovery of some Roman remains at this place, one of which, a military trophy, bore an inscription, which Brand renders "Diffusis provinciis in Britannia ad utrumque ostium exercitus posuit; i.e. The army erected this on the extension of the Roman dominion in Britain, from the western to the eastern sea." The Saxon history of Jarrow commences about the year 681, when Bennet Biscop commenced the erection of the monastery of St. Paul on the site of the long-deserted Roman station, and the monastic church, according to an inscription still preserved in it, was dedicated on the 23rd April, 685. The first monks for this monastery were transferred from Monkwearmouth, with which hence that of Jarrow was consolidated, and the united establishment was called the monastery of St. Peter and St. Paul. Jarrow shared with Monkwearmouth in the ornaments, books, &c., collected by the industry of Bennet Biscop; and its church, which was built after the Roman manner, was decorated with paintings on religious subjects, taken from the Old and New Testaments, and the windows glazed with glass. About this time, Bede, the glory of his age and country, entered the monastery. The monks, who settled at Jarrow, enjoyed their retirement in peace until the year 867, when the monastery was plundered and burnt by the Danes, after which it remained abandoned and desolate for upwards of two centuries. At length, Aldwin, a Mercian monk, with two of his brethren, determined to visit the ruined kingdom of Northumbria, the early seat of piety and learning, and hallowed by the memories of Aidan, Wilfrid, John of Beverley, Cuthbert, and Bede. The stranger monks first settled at the ruined town of Monkchester, now Newcastle; but were induced by Walcher, Bishop of Durham, to remove to Jarrow, which is represented as being at this time in a state of great dilapidation; but its new possessors contrived to place a rude roof of logs and thatch upon the naked walls, and by this means were enabled to shelter themselves from the inclemency of the weather. The revived monastery was afterwards endowed by Bishop Walcher with the townships of Jarrow, Preston, Monkton, Hedworth, Hebburn, Weston, and Harton; to these possessions, Earl Waltheof added the church of Tynemouth, and gave to the monks the body of St. Oswald. But the independence of Jarrow Monastery did not long continue; for, in 1068, Bishop Carileph removed the monks both from Jarrow and Wearmouth to Durham, reducing both houses to cells under the monastery of St. Cuthbert. At the dissolution of the religious houses, by Henry VIII., the cell of Jarrow was valued at £38 14s. 4d. per annum, according to Dugdale's account; or, according to that of Speed, £40 7s. 8d. The remains of the ancient monastery stands on the north-west edge of the slake, upon an elevation which rises gently from the haven; but they are so scattered and confused, that it is very difficult to form any conjecture as to their original appearance. The site of the cloister may still be traced to the south of the chancel of the present church, and some remains of the domestic offices of the monks are standing further to the south and west. A main wall stretches from east to west; and in the adjoining west gable, a window has been preserved, divided by stone mullions and transoms, and decorated with tracery and Saxon ornaments, dentated, zig-zag, and circular. An old round-headed door is closed up in the wall a little to the north. It is difficult, however, to determine whether some of these walls are the remains of the monastery, or of the mansion which certainly rose upon its ruins.

Jarrow is, however, remarkable for the bend or enlargement of the river at that spot; which enlargement, called Jarrow Slake, bids fair to be an important shipping place in days not far distant. This slake covers an area of 400 acres of ground; it seems to have been a haven, which has gradually choked up with sand and mud; and it is said, that it once accommodated the navy

f Egfrid, King of Northumberland, whose ships anchored in the slake. Its form is nearly an oblong square, jutting out of the southern bank of the Tyne. In 1847, the York and Newcastle Railway Company—which had gradually formed itself into a vast undertaking, by absorbing under one head about a dozen different railways and several docks and quays—obtained an act for making docks on the side of Jarrow Slake. According to the terms of this act, a sum of £150,000 will be spent on the docks. The company are empowered to make “docks, locks, quays, cuts, piers, warehouses, and storehouses.” These docks, &c., now in course of construction, were commenced in June 1855, and when completed, which they are expected to be in about three years, will be highly advantageous to the commercial proceedings of the neighbourhood. Messrs. Jackson, Bean, and Gow are the contractors.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St. Paul, adjoins the remains of the monastic buildings on the north, and was repaired, or, in fact, with the exception of the tower and a part of the chancel, rebuilt, in 1783, when, no doubt, many fragments of antiquity perished. The tower rises from the centre of the building, betwixt nave and chancel, from two low round arches, with groined ribs intersecting each other. The south side of the chancel has two pointed lights, with tracery in quatrefoils; and the north side has one square-headed window of three lights. The tower has round-headed double lights on every side exactly resembling those of Monkwearmouth; and on the north side of the tower is a door and a small light, bearing the distinctive characteristics of the Saxon style. Amidst all the various changes which have taken place in this venerable edifice during the lapse of ages, one interesting monument has been preserved, and is now in the arch of the tower, between the chancel and the nave; it is the well-known and well-authenticated inscription which records the foundation of the church in A.D. 685. The legend, it may be observed, is in good bold Roman characters throughout, with the exception of three Saxon letters. The following is the inscription:—“P DEDICATIO BASILICÆ SCI PAVLI VIII. KAL MAI ANNO XV. EGFRIÐI REG . . . . . CEOLFRIDI ABB EIVSDEMQ Q ECCLES DO AVCTORE CONDITORIS ANNO IIII.” which is thus read by Brand:—“The dedication of the church of St. Paul on the 9th of the calends of May, in the 15th year of King Egfrid, and the fourth of Ceolfrid, abbot, and, under God, the founder of the said church.” One of the bells in the tower is extremely remarkable; it is marked with two fleurs-de-lis, and inscribed in large characters “Sancte Paule, ora pro nobis.” This bell is supposed to have been placed in the original foundation, and is seventy-eight inches in circumference. In the vestry, is shown an old, rude oaken seat, said to have been the chair of Venerable Bede. The seat and sides are very ancient, but the back is acknowledged to be modern. The parish register commences in 1578. The living is a perpetual curacy, a peculiar belonging to the dean and chapter of Durham, not in charge, rated at £46, and returned at £95; gross income, £170. Patrons, Sir William Clavering, Bart., T. D. Brown, Esq., and Cuthbert Ellison, Esq. Rev. John M. Mason, incumbent.

The Parsonage House is a handsome stone structure, in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1855, at a cost of £1,000.

The Methodist New Connexion, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans have places of worship here.

The Parochial School, erected in 1840, comprises separate apartments for children of both sexes, and it will accommodate 100 pupils. John and Jane S. Curry, teachers.

Charities.—The following legacies have been bequeathed to the poor of the parish of Jarrow, viz:—£100 by General Ellison, in 1778; £20 by Jacob Powell, in 1708; £10 by William Nicholson; 20 by Thomas Pattison; and £20 by William Brunton. In the report of the Charity Commissioners, it is stated that "The amount of these legacies being £170, is secured by the bond of the corporation of Newcastle, with the amount of Walker's legacy hereafter mentioned. The yearly sum of £0 10s. is now received as the interest thereof, at the rate of four per cent, and is distributed chiefly on St. Thomas's Day, by the minister, churchwardens, and the twelve of the parish, at a public meeting, among poor persons resident in that part of the parish which is under the parish church, in sums varying from 2s. to 6s.; a preference being given to such as do not receive parochial relief. It appears from the extract of a will of Richard Walker, without date, that he left £10 to the poor of the parish of Jarrow, and directed that the same should be placed out at interest, which was to be disposed of yearly as follows, viz: amongst the poor attending the sacrament at Jarrow Church at Easter and Christmas 5s. on each of the said days, and 2s. 6d. on each of the said days amongst the poor attending Heworth Chapel, and to apply the remainder of such interest towards educating as many poor widow's children within the competency of Monkton as it would allow. The resident curate receives £2 10s. yearly as the interest, and he distributes 10s. thereof amongst the communicants at Jarrow Church at Easter and Christmas, and 5s. amongst those of Heworth Chapel. The residue is applied as directed."

MONKTON, a joint township with Jarrow and Hedworth, was anciently the property of the monastery, and is the reputed birth-place of Bede, though some writers say he was born at Jarrow, and others claim the honour for Sunderland. A well here still bears his name, and its waters were formerly in great repute for their health-giving properties. The Village of Monkton is about five miles east-by-south of Newcastle.

Bill Quay is a populous village in this parish, situated about four miles east of Gateshead, where there is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, and several manufactories.

Hebburn is another village in Jarrow parish, four-and-a-half miles east-by-south of Newcastle. The lands here formerly belonged to the adjoining monastery; and we find them possessed by the Wilby family previous to 1300; but, in 1503, the property was vested in the Greys. Hebburn was subsequently held by the Baxters, and was purchased about the year 1650 by the Ellison family, with whom it still remains. Here are chapels belonging to the Primitive Methodists, the Wesleyans, and the Wesleyan Methodist Reformers; and a school for the education of the children of those who are employed in the collieries of the neighbourhood. Hebburn Quay is situated a little to the north of Hebburn village. Large quantities of ballast are deposited here from the ships coming into the Tyne.

Pelars Main is a hamlet in this parish, four miles east of Gateshead, on the west of Hebburn Quay.

Biography.—Venerable Bede, the father of English history, was born in the year 673, on the territory afterwards belonging to the twin monasteries of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Wearmouth and Jarrow. We cannot be certain as to the exact spot, which some writers place at Monkton, some others at Jarrow; and Robert Brown, Esq., in a paper communicated to the Society of Antiquaries of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, adduces many reasons to prove that Sunderland may justly claim the honour. But be that as it ay, it is sufficiently near the mark to know that Bede was born in the neighbourhood of these two monasteries. Of his parents nothing has been recorded. He tells us in his own short narrative of himself, that he was placed at the age of seven years, under the care of Abbot Bennet, in the abbey of Wearmouth, where he was educated by the monks, and soon acquired considerable knowledge, not only in the Latin and Greek languages, but also in the Hebrew. He was admitted to deacon's orders in his nineteenth year, and was raised to the priesthood in his thirtieth, from which period he applied himself to every branch of literature and science then known; and besides study and writing comments on the Scriptures, he composed works on several subjects, on history, astrology, orthography, rhetoric, and poetry. He subsequently removed to Jarrow, where he remained for the remainder of his life. The fame of his learning, even in those barbarous times, spread from England throughout the Christian world, and the pope sent to consult him on the affairs of the church. In all, he is said to have written 150 treatises and letters, many of which have come down to us, but the principal work, and that for which he is best known, is the Ecclesiastical History of England; it commences with the invasion of Julius Cæsar, and comes down to the year 723. In itself, the work appears nothing extraordinary, but when it is considered with what difficulty authentic information could be procured, and the wide period over which it extends, it is a monument of diligence and research; and, although most of the sources from which it is compiled are now lost, the simplicity and antecedent probability of its statements entitle them to general acceptance. At the close of his useful, but unassuming career, Venerable Bede was engaged in translating the Gospel of St. John. "Dear master," said one of his disciples, "one sentence is not yet written." "Then write it quickly," said the dying monk. After a brief pause, the youth exclaimed, that it was finished. "Truly," replied Bede, alluding to his own life, "it is finished;" and repeating the "Gloria Patri," he calmly expired, A.D. 735. "The death of Bede," says William of Malmesbury, "was fatal to learning, and particularly to history, inasmuch that it may be said, that almost all knowledge of past events was buried in the same grave with him, and hath continued in that condition even to our times."

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF THE MONASTIC LIFE.

Before quitting Jarrow, we purpose giving, in this place, a brief account of the origin and progress of the monastic life, and the introduction of the various religious orders into this country; and, in entering upon this portion of our task, we must state our entire concurrence in the opinions expressed by he Rev. Mr. Maitland, librarian to the late Archbishop of Canterbury, who says, "It is quite impossible to touch the subject of monasticism, without rubbing off some portion of the dirt which has been heaped upon it." If, then, in the course of this article, the subject is treated in a different manner from that usually pursued, let it be remembered that

"Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues

and with regard to these institutions, their faults have been fully exposed, while the benefits which society has derived from them, have been silently passed over.

MONKS.—In the early ages of Christianity, we find the most devout among the followers of the gospel, distinguished by the name of Ascetes. They withdrew themselves from all distracting engagements, and employed their time in the practices of devotion, endeavouring by the exercise of every virtue to attain that sublime perfection so highly spoken of in the sacred scriptures. But, with the conversion of Constantine and the recognition of Christianity by the state, a visible falling away from primitive fervour began to be perceptible, and many bearing the name of Christian continued to cherish the ideas and the vices of paganism. This relaxation was observed by the more fervent with saddened hearts, and they resolved to leave a scene so repugnant to their zeal, and so dangerous to their virtue; and the vast and sterile deserts of the Thebais were peopled with crowds of anchorets, who, under the direction of Anthony and Pachomius, earned their scanty maintenance by the labour of their hands, and presented to their less fervent brethren models of innocence and sanctity. Such, according to the ancient writers, is the origin of the monastic state.

From the Egyptian deserts the monastic institute spread rapidly over the neighbouring countries, and the West became anxious to follow the example of the East; colonies of monks were soon planted in every corner of the Roman empire, and the conversion of the northern nations caused these colonies to be considerably increased. Some of these monks led solitary lives in wilds and among mountains, some in the midst of cities testified by their mien and garb their contempt of worldly pursuits and pleasures; and others, in great numbers, lived in monasteries under the sway of abbots. It is a remarkable fact that the first monks were laymen, but the distance which separated them from the clergy was gradually contracted; and we find that St. Athanasius, the patriarch of Alexandria, admitted some of them to holy orders, that the brethren might have among them ministers of religious worship.

Among the foremost patrons of the monastic state, we find Pope Gregory the Great, whom piety had prompted to exchange the dignity of Prefect of Rome for the cowl of a private monk, and whose merit drew him from the obscurity of his cell to seat him on the throne of St. Peter. In Sicily his ample patrimony supported six separate families of monks; and the residue of his fortune was devoted to the endowment of the great monastery of St. Andrew at Rome. From these circumstances, he might with great propriety assume the right of legislating for those who were indebted for their support to his liberality. In the rules which he composed for the guidance of the monks under his authority, we remark one distinctive feature, by which we are able to distinguish his order from most others of that period. The time which the other monks devoted to manual labour, he ordained for study, aspiring to the formation of a body of men whose abilities and zeal might defend the doctrines of the church and extend its conquests. Those of his order who were distinguished for their piety or learning, Gregory honoured with his friendship, and on his elevation to the pontificate they were admitted to his council, and from them he chose his missionaries for the Anglo-Saxons. When Augustine landed on the Isle of Thanet, he was accompanied by more than thirty of his brethren, selected from the monasteries of St. Gregory, and an additional supply of Gallic clergymen, whose duty it would be to interpret between him and the Anglo-Saxons. On his settlement at Canterbury, Augustine followed the example of his superior; to the clergy of his cathedral he associated some of his former brethren as his advisers and companions, and erected for the remainder a spacious monastery, after the Roman model. Our knowledge of the subsequent history of this order is very limited, though the general opinion is, that it existed till the time of Archbishop Dunstan, when its members adopted the habit and rule of the Benedictines.

Besides the monks of St. Gregory, there was another order, which observed the rule of St. Columba. We know little of this order, but Bede, in different portions of his works, speaks in the warmest manner of their patience, their chastity, their frequent meditation on the sacred writings, and their indefatigable exertions to attain the summit of Christian perfection. The memory of their founder, Columba, who was of the royal race of the O'Neills, in Ireland, was long cherished with particular affection by the people of the north. This order possessed one singular institution, of which we have no other example in ecclesiastical history, viz., the submission of the provincial bishops, who were members of the order, to the commands of the abbot, in every point except what appertained to their episcopal functions. The rule of St. Columba has not come down to our times, but from the notices of the lives of the monks, which we find in ancient writers, we learn that community of goods, celibacy, and the other practices of the monastic state, were observed by them. They chose for their habitations the most dreary solitudes; charity alone could draw them from their cells; never appearing in public except to reconcile enemies, to instruct the ignorant, or to plead the cause of the unfortunate.

While the followers of Gregory in the south, and those of Columba in the north, were endeavouring to extend their respective orders, another institute of monks, destined to take the place of all its competitors, attracted the notice of Christendom. It was founded by St. Benedict, a native of Norcia, who, at the commencement of the sixth century, retired to a deep and lonely cavern, amid the mountains of Subiaco, where for three years he enjoyed the sweets of retirement; but his retreat becoming known, his example drew around him numbers of monks, who revered him as their parent and law-giver. After some time he left Subiaco, and fixed his residence at Monte Cassino, in the ancient territory of the Volsci. Much relaxation had crept into the monastic institute since the time of Anthony; and Benedict composed his rule, not so much to restore the pristine vigour as to prevent the decay of the ancient discipline. "The precepts of monastic perfection," says Benedict, "are contained in the inspired writings; the examples abound in the works of the fathers; but mine is a more lowly attempt to teach the rudiments of a Christian life, that, when we are acquainted with them, we may aspire to the practice of the sublimer virtues." The rule which Benedict gave to his disciples, states distinctly how the various hours of the day were to be employed. Six hours were given to sleep, from which the monks were aroused immediately after midnight, to sing matins in the church, whither they were also called several times during the day, to sing the different portions of the divine office; seven hours were devoted to manual labour, two to study, and the remainder to the necessary refectation of the body. Their diet was simple, the flesh of quadrupeds being strictly forbidden; but the rigour of this law was mitigated in favour of the children, the aged, and the infirm. No particular form or colour of dress was prescribed, the only recommendation being, that it should be adapted to the climate, and similar to that of the labouring poor. This regulation was afterwards altered, and the Benedictines wore a black habit reaching down to the heels, with a cowl or hood of the same, and a scapulary, and under that another white habit. The Benedictine order spread rapidly from Monte Cassino, to the utmost boundaries of the Latin church. Its introduction to this country is ascribed to St. Wilfrid, who, on his pilgrimage to Rome, associated with the Benedictines, and admired the superiority of their rule. On his return from Rome in 666, he introduced this rule among his monasteries, adding to it many customs of the previous discipline, which experience had proved to be useful. Contemporary with Wilfrid, was the celebrated Bennet Biscop, abbot of Wearmouth, who embraced the religious life at Lerins, in France; and, after making several journeys to Rome, and various parts of the continent, erected a spacious monastery at the mouth of the river Wear. Bennet's reputation soon drew around him numerous disciples, and he erected a second monastery at Jarrow, on the southern bank of the Tyne; and at the death of their founder these two houses contained no less than six hundred inmates. There is no doubt but that the Benedictine was the general rule of these monks, but to this rule were added some improvements, the fruit of Bennet's observations during his travels. While the Benedictine order was thus partially established in the north, it was, through the exertions of Adhelm of Sherborne, and Egwin of Worcester, spreading equally in the south. The former introduced the rule into his three monasteries of Malmesbury, Frome, and Bradanford, while Egwin founded the splendid abbey of Evesham, expressly for Benedictine monks. This order became so firmly rooted in England, that all our cathedral priories, except Carlisle, and most of the richest abbeys in this country, were in the hands of the Benedictines. Such is the account we are able to glean from the writers of ancient times, respecting the various religious orders of the Saxon period of our history; and though in many things these orders differed from each other, yet we find in all the three engagements which are still considered requisite to the monastic state, viz., obedience to a superior, perpetual celibacy, and community of goods.

Cistercians.—Subsequent to the Norman invasion other orders were introduced into this country, and amongst the first arrivals we find the Cistercians, a reformed branch of the Benedictines, and which derived its name from Citeaux, a village situated in the diocese of Langres, in France, where Robert, Abbot of Molesme, in Burgundy, founded a monastery towards the end of the eleventh century. Robert had vainly endeavoured to revive the decaying discipline of his convent, by obliging his monks to observe with greater exactness the rule of St. Benedict; and failing in his attempt, he retired from Molesme, with about twenty monks, who had not been infected with the prevailing tepidity of his monastery, and proceeded to Citeaux, which was at that time overspread with brambles and thorns. He then laid the foundation of the Cistercian order. Abbot Robert, however, in obedience to the commands of a provincial council, shortly afterwards returned to Molesme, and was succeeded in the government of Cîteaux by Stephen Harding, an Englishman who presided over the abbey on the arrival of St. Bernard, in 1113. St. Bernard visited the monastery of Cîteaux with about thirty companions, for the express purpose of joining the Cistercian order, which from that period began to flourish; and, before the end of the twelfth century, it had spread throughout the greatest part of Europe. The first monastery of this order built in England was that of Waverly, in Surrey, which was founded in the year 1129, by William Gifford, Bishop of Winchester. Tintern Abbey was founded three years later; and in 1132, Walter L'Espece, a baron in the north, founded Rievall Abbey; and a few years later Roger de Mowbray founded Byland Abbey. The celebrity which this order attained both in England, and on the continent of Europe, arose from the peculiar sanctity which was believed to prevail amongst its members. A writer, who flourished in the thirteenth century, in speaking of this order says, "All the church of Jesus Christ is full of the high reputation and opinion of their sanctity, as it were with the odour of some divine balsam, and there is no country or province wherein this vine, loaded with blessings, has not spread its branches." In describing their observances, the same writer says, "They neither wear skins nor shirts, nor ever eat flesh, unless in grievous sickness; and they neither eat fish nor eggs, nor milk, nor cheese, but only upon extraordinary occasions, and when given to them in charity. Their lay brothers, who live in the country round about the abbey, drink no wine. All the brothers, both lay and clerical, lie only upon straw beds, in their tunics and cowls; they rise at midnight, and spend the rest of the night till break of day, in singing God's praises; and having sung prime and assisted at mass, and confessed their faults in chapter, they spent the rest of the day in labour, reading, or prayer, without ever giving way to idleness; and in all those exercises they maintain strict and continual silence, except during the hour which is allowed them for spiritual conference. Their fasts are continual, from the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, till Easter; and they exercise hospitality towards the poor with extraordinary charity." The Cistercians were called white monks, from their dress, which was a white frock or cassock. This order took to itself all the quiet nooks, valleys, and all the pleasant streams of Old England, and gladdened the soul of the labourer by the constant music of its bells. Previous to the dissolution of the monastic establishments the Cistercians possessed 101 abbeys and monasteries in this country, of which the annual revenues were £18,691 12s. 6½d. This order is remarkable as being the only one of the ancient religious orders which has been revived in these countries in our own times; and at Mount St. Bernard, in Leicestershire, or at Mount Mellera, in the county of Waterford, in Ireland, we may again see the austere rule of the ancient Cistercians in full practice.

Cluniacs.—Another branch of the Benedictines, and one that was unknown in England until after the Conquest, was the Cluniac Order, which derived its name from Clugni, in the province of Burgundy; where Odo, a man of great learning and piety, being created abbot in the tenth century, endeavoured to reform the Benedictine rule; and, in accomplishing his purpose, added to the ancient discipline some new observances; and thus became the founder of a new order. The Cluniac monks wore the same dress as the Benedictines, which was a black frock or cassock, with a white shirt or tunic underneath, and a black hood and scapulary to put over the head and shoulders. The first house founded by this order in England was at Lewes, in Sussex, where they were established under the protection of Earl Warenne.

in-law to William the Conqueror. So strict was the silence observed amongst the Cluniacs, that to violate it before prime was deemed a grievous offence; and this gave rise to the use of signs amongst them, instead of words. Their fasts they obeyed, for the most part, the Benedictine regulations. From the thirteenth of September until Lent, they ate only once a day, excepting the octaves of Christmas and the Epiphany, when they were allowed to eat an extra meal. Eighteen poor persons were fed every day from their table, and during Lent this number was very much increased. At the suppression of the religious houses this order possessed twenty priories and cells in England, whose annual revenues amounted to £4,792 9s. 2½d.

Grandmontines.—This order, like the preceding ones, was an offshoot of the Benedictines, and received its name from Grammont, in the province of Auvergne, near which the first monastery belonging to it was founded. It was abolished by Stephen, a nobleman of Auvergne, at the close of the twelfth century; was introduced into this country in the reign of Henry I., and settled at Abberbury, in Shropshire. It possessed but three houses in England.

Carthusians.—The last branch of the Benedictines which we shall notice, is the Order of the Carthusians, so called from Chartreux, a wild and desert spot of ground, near Grenoble, in Dauphine, surrounded with barren mountains and craggy rocks. The founder of this order, which surpassed all the others in austerity of manners and severity of discipline, was Bruno, a native of Cologne, and Canon of Rheims, in France. He at first adopted the rule of St. Benedict, to which he added a number of severe and rigorous precepts. The Carthusians never eat flesh; and were obliged to fast on bread, water, and salt, one day in every week. They always wore a hair shirt next to their skin; and were only allowed to walk about their own grounds once in a week, and none of them were ever permitted to go beyond the confines of the monastery, except the prior and procurators, and they only when necessity compelled. Their habit was white, with a black outer cloak. This order was introduced into England in 1180, when the first house was founded at Witham, in Somersetshire. Their most celebrated establishment was the Charter House, in London, now used as the school and hospital of Thomas Sutton. They formerly possessed nine houses in this country, and their annual revenue was £2,947 15s. 4d.

CANONS.—Passing from the monks we come next to the canons, who were divided into two classes, secular and regular. The former were clergymen, who performed spiritual offices for the laity, and took upon themselves the cure of souls, which the regular canons could not do without dispensation. They differed in nothing almost from ordinary priests, save that they were under the government of some local statutes; for though in some places they were obliged to live in common as the monks and regular canons did, yet they generally lived apart and were maintained by separate prebends almost in the same manner as the canons and prebendaries of our cathedral and collegiate churches at the present day. Regular canons were such as lived under some rule. They were a less strict sort of religious than the monks, but lived together in common, and were obliged to observe the statutes of their order; their chief rule being that of St. Augustine. They were little known till the tenth or eleventh century, were not brought to England till after the Conquest, and seem not to have obtained the name of Augustinian canons until some time afterwards. Their habit consisted of a long black cassock, with a white rochet over it, and over that a black cloak and hood. There were about 175 houses of regular canons in England and Wales, and their revenues amounted to £33,027 1s. 11d. Besides the common and general kind of canons, there were also the following particular orders, viz.:—First, such as observed the rule of St. Augustine, according to the order of St. Nicholas at Arrouasia; they possessed five houses in this country. Second, those who adopted the rule of St. Augustine, according to the Order of St. Victor: they had three houses in England. Third, those of the order of St. Augustine, who followed the institutions of St. Mary of Meretune; they had only one house here. Fourth, the Premonstratensian canons, who lived according to the rule of St. Augustine, as reformed by St. Norbert, Archbishop of Magdeburgh, in 1120, at Premonstratum, in the diocese of Laon, in Picardy. It was called Premonstratum, because it was said to have been pointed out by the Blessed Virgin to the head of this reformed order. The members of this institute were also called white canons from their habit, which was a white cassock, with a rochet over it, a long white cloak, and white cap. They were brought to England shortly after 1140, and first settled at Newhouse, in Lincolnshire. There were about thirty-five houses of this order in England previous to the dissolution. Fifth, the Sempringham or Gilbertine canons, who were founded by St. Gilbert, at Sempringham, in Lincolnshire, in 1131, and confirmed by Pope Eugenius. Their rule was composed from that of St. Augustine and St. Benedict, with some special modifications of their own. The habit of these canons was a black cassock, with a white cloak over it, and a hood lined with lambskins. At the suppression of the religious establishments, there were twenty-five houses of this order in the kingdom. Sixth, the Canons Regular of the Holy Sepulchre, who were instituted at the commencement of the twelfth century, in imitation of the regulars established at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, at Jerusalem. They were sometimes called Canons of the Holy Cross, and wore the same habit as the other Augustinian canons, distinguished only by a double red cross upon their cloak or upper garment. Their first house in this country was at Warwick, where they settled in 1135, and at the period of the dissolution, they possessed only two houses in England.

NUNS.—Besides these orders of men, there were Benedictine, Gilbertine, Cluniac, Cistercian, Carthusian, Augustinian, and Premonstratensian nuns, who followed the same rules with their respective monks, omitting only what was proper for their sex; they wore habits of the same colour, and had their heads always covered with a veil. To the orders of nuns just mentioned, we must add some others which deserve particular notice. First, nuns of the Order of Fontevrault, which was founded at the latter part of the eleventh century, by Robert D'Abrissil, at Fontevrault, in Poitiers, where he erected an abbey, about the year 1100. Though this order, which was a reformation of the Benedictine, was chiefly for women, yet, on the continent, they had also religious men belonging to the institute, who were under the government of the abbess; for the founder took as his model, the recommendation by our Blessed Saviour, of the Blessed Virgin and St. John the Evangelist to each other, and directed that the men should acknowledge the abbess, or prioress, of every convent, as their superior, and submit to her authority both in spirituals and temporals. The Abbess of Fontevrault was the general superior and head of the order. The nuns of this institute were brought into England by Robert Bossu, Earl of Leicester, before 1161, and placed at New Eaton, in the county of Warwick. There were only two houses of this order in England, and we find no mention made of any monks in them, but of a prior at Nun Eaton. They wore a kind of tunic or cassock, of undyed wool, and over that a large black garment. Second, nuns of the Order of St. Clare, who founded her order at Assissi, in Italy, about the year 1212. It was confirmed by Pope Innocent III., and again by Pope Honorius, in 1223. St. Clare being a native of the same town, and living at the same time as St. Francis, the founder of the Order of Friars Minor, and her nuns observing the same rule, and wearing the same coloured habit as the Franciscan Friars, were often called Minoresses. They were likewise called the Poor Clares, from their scanty endowments. They were brought to England by Blanche, Queen of Navarre, wife of Edmund, Earl of Lancaster, about 1253, and had their first house without Aldgate, in London. At the dissolution, they had four houses in England. Third, Brigittines, or nuns of our Holy Saviour, who were instituted by St. Bridget, princess of Nericia, in Sweden, about the middle of the fourteenth century, under the rule of St. Augustine, with some additions of her own. This order, though chiefly for men, had men in every convent, who lived in different apartments, and differed from all other orders, in requiring a particular number of men and women in every house, viz. :—sixty nuns, thirteen priests, eight deacons, and six lay brothers. Their habit was a tunic of coarse grey woollen, and a cloak of the same. The nuns had five small pieces of red cloth on their habits, to represent the five wounds of our Redeemer. The priests had a red cross on their breasts, with a round piece of cloth of a white colour in the centre of it to represent the host; the deacons had a white circle, with four pieces of red cloth to represent tongues; and the lay brothers had a white cross with five red pieces, to represent the five wounds. There was but one house of this order in England, that at Sion, in Middlesex, which was founded by Henry V., in 1414.

MILITARY ORDERS.—The religious ardour which was awakened in Europe, towards the close of the eleventh century, by the preaching of Peter the hermit, and which led the flower of European chivalry to Palestine, in order to wrest the Holy Sepulchre from the hands of the Moslem, was the means of introducing a distinct order of monastics, who are known by the names of Trinitarians, Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, Knights Templars, and Teutonic Knights, or Knights of St. Mary of Jerusalem, according to the peculiar rules which they respectively adopted.

Trinitarians.—This order was founded by John de Matha and Felix de Valois, two men of devoted piety, who led an austere and solitary life at Erfroy, in the diocese of Meaux, in France. The great number of Christians who were made prisoners by the Mahometans, in Palestine, gave rise to the institution of this order in the latter part of the twelfth century; at it received its greatest degree of stability under the pontificates of Honorius III. and Clement IV. The monks of this order were called "Trinitarians," or "Brethren of the Holy Trinity," because all their churches were solemnly dedicated to that profound mystery: they were also styled "Mathurins," from having a monastery at Paris, near the chapel of St. Mathurin; and "Brethren of the Redemption of Captives," because the end and aim of their institute was to find out the means for restoring liberty to the Christian captives in the Holy Land, in which charitable work they were obliged by their rule to employ the third part of their revenue. They were brought into England in 1224, had their first house in Kent, and at the dissolution possessed ten or twelve convents.

The Knights Hospitallers.—This order received its name from an hospital built at Jerusalem, for the use of pilgrims coming to the Holy Land which was dedicated to St. John the Baptist; for the duty of these knights was to provide for such pilgrims at that hospital, and to protect them from injuries and insults upon the road. It was founded about the year 1092, and was much favoured by Godfrey de Bouillon, and his successor Baldwin, King of Jerusalem. They followed chiefly the rule of St. Augustine, and wore a black habit, with a white cross upon it. By a bull of Pope Pascal II., 1113 the hospital was put under the protection of the Holy See, and had the valuable privilege conferred upon it of electing its own superintendent, and being exempt from the payment of tithes. Through the liberality of many of the princes of Christendom, and the pious donations of those who frequented the holy places, the revenues of the hospital far exceeded the wants of those whom they were designed to relieve. In consequence of this, Raymond de Puy, who was the head of this establishment, offered to the King of Jerusalem to make war upon the Mahometans at his own expense, seconded by his brethren, who served under him in the hospital. Baldwin II., to whom this proposal was made, readily accepted it, and the enterprise was approved and confirmed by the authority of the pope. The whole order was, upon this occasion, divided into three classes; the first contained the knights or soldiers of illustrious birth, who were to fight for the Christian cause; the second contained the priests, who were to officiate in the churches that belonged to their order; and the third contained the brethren, or the soldiers of low condition. This order, on many occasions, gave eminent proofs of resolution and valour, and acquired great opulence by their heroic exploits. When not engaged in war, the various duties of the hospital occupied the knights, and they were most sedulous in their attention to the wounded soldiers, or worn-out pilgrims. When Palestine was irrecoverably lost to the Christians, the knights of St. John passed into the Isle of Cyprus; they afterwards possessed themselves of the Isle of Rhodes, where they remained a considerable time; but being finally driven thence by the Turks, they received from the Emperor Charles V. a grant of the Isle of Malta. This order came into England in 1100, and was established at Clerkenwell, in London. Their superior in this country was the first lay baron, and had a seat in Parliament. There were also nuns of this order, but they had only one house in this kingdom, that of Bucklands, in Somersetshire.

The Knights Templars. — This order was founded in 1118, by the Patriarch of Jerusalem, and consisted at first of nine knights, who lived in community near the site of the temple, and whose duty it was to protect pilgrims, and to guard the roads near Jerusalem. They received from Pope Honorius II. a white mantle without a cross, as their regular habit. Pope Eugene III. commanded them to wear red crosses; and they were taught that the white garment was symbolical of the purity of their lives and profession, and the red crosses emblematical of the martyrdom which they would willingly undergo, in defending the Holy Land from the hostile inroads of the infidels. The templars wore linen coifs, and red caps close over them. shirts and stockings of twisted mail, a sopra vest, and broad belts, with swords inserted. Over the whole was a white cloak touching the ground. In opposition to the practice of most religious orders, the templars wore long beards. The templars came into England in the beginning of Stephen's reign; their principal station was on the south side of Holborn, near Southampton Buildings, but they afterwards removed to Fleet-street. This order rose rapidly into power and dignity, and its eminent services in the cause of Christendom were cheerfully repaid by a general exemption from the control of, as well as from contributions to, the clergy. Philip the Fair, King of France, repeatedly denounced this order to the Pope, Clement V., and at length arrested all the templars in his dominions. Clement blamed his precipitancy, and reserved the inquiry to the Holy See. He informed all Christian kings of the proceedings, and appointed judges to examine the charges which had been preferred against the order. The process lasted three years. It is not in human nature that all the members of a rich and powerful order should be immaculate, but against the bulk of the order no charge was substantiated. Such a storm, however, had been raised by Philip, that Clement deemed it prudent as a matter, not of justice, but of expediency, to suppress the order, in 1312. In some places their property had already been confiscated by rapacious princes; in England the judges decided that it reverted to the lords of the fees as their escheats. As, however, these lands had been given for religious purposes, the parliament refused to appropriate them, but for the health of their souls and discharge of their consciences," assigned them to the Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem. The superior of this order was styled the master of the temple, and was often summoned to parliament. The Teutonic Order does not come strictly within the scope of this article, which is confined to orders connected with England. The Order of St. Lazarus of Jerusalem, of which there were a few houses in this country, seems to have been founded for the relief of lepers and impotent persons belonging to the military orders.

FRIARS.—The thirteenth century was distinguished by the rise of some new religious orders, which, although not strictly speaking monastic bodies, yet demand a passing notice in this sketch. These orders speedily increased, and soon eclipsed in popular estimation even the ancient monastic establishments. Two, however, far exceeded in reputation all the others, viz., the Dominicans and Franciscans.

The Dominicans were founded by St. Dominic, a Spaniard by birth, a descendant of the illustrious house of Guzman, and a canon of Osma; and from him they derived their name. They were also called Black Friars, from the colour of their habit, and Friars Preachers, from preaching being the secular object of their institute. Their rule, which was chiefly that of St. Augustine, was approved of by Pope Innocent III., and confirmed by Pope Honorius, in 1216. At the foundation of their order, these friars wore the same habit as the Augustinian canons, but, in 1219, they took another, consisting of a white cassock and hood over it, and when they went abroad they wore over these a black cloak and hood. The Dominicans were introduced into this country in 1221, and had their first house at Oxford. At the dissolution they possessed forty-three convents. There were nuns of this order, but there does not appear to have been any of them in England.

The Franciscans.—This order was founded by St. Francis of Assisi, in the year 1209, and their rule was confirmed by Pope Innocent III., in the following year. The members of this order were called Franciscans, from their founder; Grey Friars, from the colour of their habit, and were also known by the name of Friars Minor. They wore a loose habit of a grey colour, with a cloak and cowl of the same, girded their loins with a cord, and went barefooted. They came to England in the reign of Henry III., and their first establishment was at Canterbury, in 1224. At the dissolution of monasteries, they had fifty-five houses in England, which were divided into the seven wardenships of London, York, Cambridge, Bristol, Oxford, Newcastle, and Worcester. Relaxations having crept into this order, it was reformed and brought back to its primitive discipline; afterwards, those who followed the mitigated rule were called Conventuals, while those who accepted the reformation were called Recollects. As to the Capuchins, and other distinctions, they chiefly arose after the Reformation, consequently they possessed no houses in this country.

The Carmelites, or White Friars, came into England in 1240, when they were introduced by the Lords John Vesci and Richard Grey, and had their first houses at Alnwick, in Northumberland, and at Aylesford, in Kent, at the latter of which places their first European chapter was held, in 1245. Their origin is unknown; but they were established upon Mount Carmel, in Syria, from time immemorial, whence they were driven by the Saracens, about the year 1238. Their rule, which was founded upon that of St. Basil, is said to have been composed for them by Albert, patriarch of Jerusalem, in 1171. Their garments are said to have been at first white, but being obliged by the infidels to make them party-coloured, they continued the use of such for about half a century after their introduction into Europe, and about the year 1290 made them white again. There were about forty houses of this order in England.

Crossed or Crouched Friars.—This order was instituted, or at least reformed, by Gerard, prior of St. Mary of Morrello, at Bologna, and confirmed, in 1169, by Pope Alexander III., who brought them under St. Augustine's rule, and made some constitutions for their government. They obtained their name from their having, at first, carried a cross fixed to a staff in their hands; but afterwards they had a cross of red cloth upon the backs or breasts of their habit, which Pope Pius II. ordered to be made of a blue colour. They came into England in 1244, had their first house at Colchester, and, at the dissolution of the monastic institutions, had six or seven establishments in this country.

Augustinian Friars.—We possess no authentic information regarding the foundation of this order, which was introduced into England about the year 1250. Its members wore a white garment and scapular when in the convent, but in choir and when they went abroad they had over the former a black cloak and hood, which were girt with a black leather thong. They had about thirty-two convents here at the time of the suppression of the religious houses.

Besides these orders there were Bethlemite Friars, Friars of the Order of Sac, the Order of St. Anthony of Vienna, and the Bon Hommes or Good Men, but they never numbered many members in this country.

Such are the various orders which existed in England anterior to the Reformation, let us now take a short review of the motives which led to their suppression. Henry VIII., having given the rein to his licentious passions, and cast off the papal supremacy, which refused to sanction him in the indulgence of his unlawful appetites, found that one great obstacle to the change he wished to make in the country, was the existence of numerous and powerful monasteries. In these were to be found men who could not easily be persuaded to exchange the supremacy of the pope for that of the king, men who would not forswear themselves, and deny the articles of their faith at the bidding of a tyrant. This then was one motive which caused the religious houses of England to be obnoxious to Henry, whose whole heart was bent upon establishing his spiritual supremacy, and these were the bodies from which he was sure to receive the most determined opposition. They must Therefore, be removed out of his way, they must be sacrificed to his ambition. Another, and not less powerful motive, was to be found in the great wealth of some of these religious houses. The example of Germany had shown that the church might be plundered with ease, and also with impunity. This lesson was not lost upon the English monarch, who was "strongly disposed," says Bishop Godwin, "to promote any reformation which might turn a penny, and furnish his exchequer." Indeed Cromwell, his prime minister in ecclesiastical matters, had long since promised that, if the king would only assume the spiritual supremacy, the wealth of the church should soon be placed at his disposal. Another party interested in the dissolution of the monasteries were the nobles, who anxiously looked for a considerable share of the spoils, and therefore lent a very willing aid. With such an opposing force, it was next to impossible for the religious houses to preserve their property. Yet so great was their hold on the hearts of the people, that it was no easy matter to dispossess them. It could not be done by fair means. Plain straightforward dealing they could meet, without any fear of the result, but this would not suit the purposes of their enemies, who therefore adopted another line of action. Acting upon the principle of the old proverb, "Give a dog a bad name and hang him," their enemies determined upon calumniating these institutions, taking away their good character as far as possible, and representing that in many of them the rules of the order were not properly observed, but that every sort of vice and wickedness prevailed; and it was suggested that they should be visited and inspected, with a view to their reformation. Another device also, by which it was sought to predispose the public mind in favour of any severe measures that might hereafter be taken against the monasteries, was to set a rumour in circulation that there was some prospect of a war with the Emperor of Germany, whose large fleet was then conveying the wealth of the Indies to his European dominions. It was said, that if the king wished to extend the commerce of the country proportionably to the opportunities that had been lately offered by the discovery of America, he must fortify his existing ports, and make new ones. This could not be done without a large outlay, a charge too great for the crown revenues, and for which the king would not willingly burden his subjects with a new tax. Should it be found, therefore, that any of these monasteries were so deeply immersed in vice that reformation was impossible, and should it be determined that they ought rather to be suppressed, their confiscated revenues would be found most conveniently to supply the necessary funds, and lest any one should scruple about the propriety of devoting to secular purposes, monies that had been solemnly set apart for the service of God, another project was also talked about, though, if we may judge from the result, without any serious intention of ever really carrying it into effect, it was said that the monarch wished to increase the number of bishoprics, and that the revenues of the suppressed monasteries would provide an ample endowment for the new sees.

The destruction of these institutions having been determined upon, no means were spared to prepare the popular mind for such a result, and various plausible pretexts were invented to direct the attention of the people from the manifest injustice of the transaction. It was proposed that the king should appoint some one to visit the monasteries, but as if to render the mockery patent to all, Cromwell was the person chosen to be visitor—a man who had not only professed his determination to carry out the king's wishes, but had actually himself been the first to suggest the idea. He appointed commissioners to assist him in his visitation; and at first every effort was made by bribes and intimidation, to extort from the authorities at the head of each monastery, a voluntary surrender of their property; but when these failed, all kinds of scandalous stories were invented and circulated, so as to form some sort of ground for their suppression. The commissioners, on their return, gave in a most tragical account of the immorality which they had discovered. Yet, strange to say, in the preamble to the statute which was drawn up in obedience to the report of the commission, for the dissolution of the lesser abbeys, while it was stated that in them there was much ungodliness of living, and that redress was required for the good of religion, it was also distinctly acknowledged, that in the larger monasteries "religion was right well kept," and therefore it was proposed that these lesser houses should be suppressed, but that such of their inmates as desired it should be allowed to go into the larger houses. Thus was completed the first movement towards the destruction of the religious institutions of our ancestors.

The dissolution of the smaller houses only prepared the way, and made the dissolution of the larger ones more easy. The same process which had been so successful in effecting the overthrow of the smaller houses, was now repeated against the others. Large pensions were offered to those abbots and priors who would make what was called voluntary resignation of their property; but, where bribery failed, menaces were employed, and some were terrified into submission by the extraordinary rigour adopted against those who stood up manfully for their rights and possessions. The monks of the Charter House, London, were committed to Newgate for what the commissioners were pleased to term their "traitorous behaviour," which was, in fact, neither more nor less than the refusal to surrender. Five of these monks died of the hardships they endured, and five more with difficulty escaped the same fate. The Abbot of Glastonbury and two of his monks were treated in the most inhuman manner. Dugdale tells that this abbot "governed his monastery with great prudence and judgment; that his table, attendance, and officers, were an honour to the nation; that his apartment was a sort of well-disciplined court, where the sons of noblemen and gentlemen were sent for virtuous education, and returned thence excellently accomplished; that he had bred up nearly three hundred after this manner, besides others of a meaner rank, whom he fitted for the Universities; and that every week, on Wednesdays and Fridays, all the poor of the neighbourhood were relieved by his particular charity." "This abbot," continues our authority, "being unwilling to surrender his abbey to the king, or to lend an ear to any of the solicitations which were addressed to him, was seized at his manor house, upon the pretence of embezzling the plate belonging to the convent, and without much formal process as to law or equity, was drawn from Wells, where he had been condemned, to Glastonbury on a hurdle, and hanged, with two of his monks: being hurried out of the world without regard to his age, and not so much as suffered to take leave of his convent." Certainly such an example as this was calculated to persuade many a timid abbot or prior to make a voluntary surrender of his property. If, however, any were still refractory, and yet it was not deemed expedient to put them to death, the obnoxious individual was forcibly deposed by the king, and some more manageable monk put in his place. In other instances the seals of the convents were taken away, and by this means the inmates were deprived of all means of subsistence. They were no longer able to make leases, nor to sell their jewels; the means of paying their debts were denied them, and they could not even procure the very necessities of life. Thus they were reduced at last, and starved into a surrender.

Having at length gained possession, an act of parliament was passed, conveying all the religious houses, colleges, hospitals already dissolved, or to be dissolved hereafter, to the king, his heirs, and successors for ever, and in the preamble it is stated that sundry abbots, priors, abbesses, &c., had given the king their manors, lands, &c., of their own free and voluntary minds, goodwill, and assent, without constraint or compulsion. In order that parliament might be well disposed to the passing of the bill, promises were made to the nobility of large shares in the spoils. As there are some who profess to credit the scandalous stories told by the commissioners, concerning immoralities practised in the monasteries, we may state, that whenever a cathedral church was newly founded, or remodelled, in a place where a monastery had been suppressed, we almost invariably find that several of the dismissed monks were promoted to honours and dignities in the new foundation. Thus in the dissolution of the monastery of Christ Church, Canterbury, for instance, Archbishop Cranmer himself admitted to the new collegiate church no less than thirty members of the dissolved priory, and others of them were preferred in other churches. "If lewdness and immorality had been scandalously practised in this house," observes Dugdale, "Cranmer could not have suffered them to have been admitted into this college; hereupon," he continues, "let us lay aside all such reports concerning immoralities practised in the convents, and let us build upon surer grounds, and more Christian principles, the reasons whereby we justify the dissolution of popish monasteries in this nation." "Are the monks charged with covetousness?" asks the same writer. "They did indeed abound in wealth, but they neither enriched their families nor consumed their wealth upon their lusts. All they had was spent either in alms or hospitality, or else in stately and magnificent buildings, of which the present fabric of the church (at Canterbury) is a fair monument; or else in decking and beautifying the church with the richest ornaments, wherein they abounded. Are they accused of idleness? Their life, indeed, was not much spent in bodily labour; but much of it in bodily exercises, in fastings, penances, devout meditations night and day, and in some other superstitious formalities wherein they placed too much merit, and which they mistook for godliness itself. Are they censured as illiterate? In these times there was but little learning in the world; but most of the learning that there was, was to be found in the cloisters of the monks, where some did attain to such a proficiency of knowledge, as in those times was to be esteemed high and great. Are they condemned as guilty of intemperance and luxury? They had their daily allowance of food and wine in their common refectory, but I do not conceive that this daily allowance did administer to excess, even upon their extraordinary festival commemorations." To these queries and replies by Dugdale, it can scarcely be requisite to add anything. We will rather devote our remaining space to some account of the consequences that followed the dissolution of the monasteries. No less than 376 such establishments fell, and a yearly revenue of £32,000 was brought into the royal exchequer, besides goods and chattels to the value of £100,000. But, on the other hand, more than 10,000 persons were cast into the world, without any adequate provision, ruined and undone. A piteous and unusual sight presented itself throughout the country. Monks and nuns wandering about asking for bread; they who had so continually ministered to the wants of the poor, now themselves in need of the commonest necessities of life. And even this resource was soon denied them, for in the following reign, parliament made a statute against vagabonds, which was in reality levelled against the monks. Whilst the monks and nuns were thus reduced to beggary, the churches and monasteries which they had built were rifled, profaned, pulled down, or turned into dwelling-houses, barns, or pigeon-houses: the church plate was swept away, the sacred furniture converted to common use, and the choir ornaments removed, in order to decorate the drawing-room and bed-chamber.

Something had been said in the beginning about a prospect of war, and the necessity of making provision for it, something had also been rumoured about the creation of new bishoprics. But out of the eighteen bishoprics which had been talked of, no more than six were established; and as for the war, it was a mere pretence to deceive the people. The means which had been so fraudulently obtained, on the pretext of providing for the war, were no longer at the king's disposal, for large promises had been made beforehand to the nobles and to others, and these were kept. The property was not applied to pious uses. The abbey were not turned into public schools and seminaries of learning, nor into hospitals, nor into asylums for the poor, but were made over to the royal favourites, and were often bestowed in acknowledgment of the most trivial services. Fuller tells us, for instance, that the king "granted a religious house to a gentlewoman, because she presented him with a dish of pudding which happened to please his palate." He even made church property his stake at play, and thus played away many thousands a year that had once belonged to the monasteries. To one nobleman no less than thirty monasteries were allotted, to another thirteen, and by these means the property was soon dissipated past all recovery. And how did these nobles use the possessions which they had thus obtained? "Who can call to mind without grief and indignation," says Southey, "how many magnificent edifices were overthrown in this undistinguishing havoc! Malmesbury, Battle, Waltham, Malvern, Tintern, Nievaux, Fountains, Whalley, Kirkstall, and so many others; the noblest works of architecture, and the most venerable monuments of antiquity; each the blessing of the surrounding country, and collectively the glory of the land. Glastonbury, which was the most venerable of all, even less for its undoubted age, than for the circumstances connected with its history, and which in beauty and sublimity of structure, was equalled by few, surpassed by none, was converted by Somerset, after it had been stripped and dilapidated, into a manufactory, where refugee weavers, chiefly French and Walloons, were set up in their trade. The persons into whose hands the abbey lands had passed, used their new property as ill as they had acquired it. The tenants were compelled to surrender the writings, by which they held estates for two or three lives at an easy rent, payable chiefly in produce; the rents were trebled, and quadrupled, and the fines raised in even more enormous proportions, sometimes even twenty-fold. Nothing of the considerate superintendence which the monks had exercised, nothing of their liberal hospitality, was experienced from these 'step-lords,' as Latimer, in his honest indignation, denominated them. The same spirit which converted Glastonbury into a woollen manufactory, depopulated whole domains, for the purpose of converting them into sheep-walks; the tenants being turned out to beg, or rob, or starve. To such an extent was their inhuman system carried, that a manifest decrease of population appeared." The contemporary historians tell us, that the whole face of the country was changed, it was overrun with pauperism. As long as the monasteries stood unmolested, there had been no necessity for acts of parliament for the relief of the poor, no assessment upon the parish for that purpose, no union work-house, no poor-law guardians and relieving officers, by whom poverty is very often treated as a crime. The rule of the abbeyes was a Christian rule. They exercised hospitality towards the rich, and charity towards the poor; and when they were suppressed, it was acknowledged, even by those who had been instrumental in their destruction, that there was a general decay of charity. They said that "in more than a hundred places where, in former times, twenty pounds a year were regularly given to the poor, now not one meal of meat was given;" and the misery which was the consequence of this can easily be imagined. "In truth," says the Rev. Peter Newcome, rector of Shenley, Herts, "the monks did more to civilise mankind, and to bring them within the comforts of society, than any set of men of any denomination have ever done. And yet the ungrateful world, that was enjoying the fruit of their labours and their riches, now that it beheld the edifices completed, cast down the builders and the scaffolding, as if no longer useful! In spite of all the calumny thrown out against these monastic institutions, nothing so well proclaims their utility as this—that they maintained themselves in credit and repute, some of them a thousand years, and many of them during the space of three hundred, four hundred, and five hundred years, and that, when they were dissolved, Edward VI. and his counsellors, found it necessary to endow new hospitals, to build new schools, and to provide new relief for the poor and helpless."

Such is a brief outline of the rise and progress of the monastic state, of the introductions of the various religious orders into this country, and of the dissolution of the monasteries, at the time of the Reformation. Such were the motives which led to their suppression, the manner in which that suppression was effected; and from whatever point of view we contemplate it, we see the mark of evil set upon it in the most plain and unmistakable manner. It had its origin in the worst passions of the human heart; it was carried out by a mixture of fraud and most cruel violence, and without conferring any real benefit on any part of the nation, it produced ruin and misery for the poor. They, above all other classes of society, have reason to lament the day that saw

"That violent commotion, which o'erthrew,
In town, and city, and sequester'd glen,
Altar, and cross, and church of solemn roof,
And old religious house, pile after pile;
And shook the tenants out into the fields,
Like wild beasts without a home!"

SOUTH SHIELDS PARISH.

The parish of South Shields is bounded on the north by the Tyne, on the west and south-west by the parish of Jarrow, on the south by Whitburn, and on the east by the sea. It comprises the townships of Harton, South Shields, and Westoe; but South Shields is subdivided into four constabularies, called Low Ward, East Pan Ward, Middle Ward, and West Pan Ward.

HARTON township comprises an area of 1,537 acres, and its rateable value is £4,587. Its population in 1801 was 160; in 1811, 205; in 1821, 235; in 1831, 217; in 1841, 265; and in 1851, 770 souls. This township was included in Aldwin's donation to the reviving monastery of Jarrow, and is now held under the dean and chapter of Durham by Robert Delisle, Esq., the executors of Thomas Forrest, Esq., Mary Watson, Mrs. Gibbon, Rev. Thomas Brewster, John Robinson, Esq., J. B. Hay, Esq., Isabella Straker, Mrs. Fox, and others. Here is an extensive colliery, which affords employment to a considerable number of men and boys. Harton pit is about 1,260 feet in depth, and has been rendered remarkable by the experiments of Professor Airey, the Astronomer Royal, who selected it for his recent experiments on the weight of the earth. The apparatus he employed consisted of two astronomical clocks, with compensation pendulums, two invariable pendulums—Kater's—suspended on strong tripod iron stands, immediately in front of the clock pendulums. An astronomical clock and an invariable pendulum were placed at each station, with barometer and thermometer attached, which were regularly observed—so that the necessary corrections might be made for atmospheric resistance, variations of temperature, &c. There was also at each station a galvanic signal needle—and these, connected by insulated wires, placed the observers in electric communication. The upper and lower stations of Harton pit were exactly in a vertical line, and distant near a quarter of a mile; and at each station the instruments were carefully enclosed, to prevent the vibrations of the pendulums being affected by currents of air. This inclosure was effected by the construction of what, for the moment, we called pendulum rooms. One was at the top of the pit—the other at the bottom. The mode in which the experiments were conducted may thus briefly be explained:—The instruments in the upper and lower rooms were fac similes of each other; and at certain intervals, to correct any irregularity, those at the top were placed below, and those below above—changing places. The upper and lower astronomical clocks, exactly regulated to each other, had each on the balls of their pendulums an illuminated disc, about the size of a crown-piece. Exactly in front, and within a few inches, hung a free—Kater's—pendulum, suspended on very hard steel, shaped to an obtuse angle, moving on an agate plane. The number of vibrations of the clocks within any given time were of course registered by the clocks themselves. The number of the vibrations of the free pendulums, produced exclusively by gravitation, were ascertained exactly by their proportionate number to those of the clock. At intervals each free pendulum—which moves more quickly than the clock pendulum—passed and repassed in front of the latter, exposing, first on the right and then on the left, the illuminated disc on the clock pendulum. When a certain series had been gone through, the illuminated disc was covered a second or two by the free pendulum in front: and this obscuration or coincidence marked exactly the proportionate number of vibrations due to each. The exact time was then noted, the temperature, the barometric pressure, the relative time of the clocks above and below, by the galvanic signal needle; and then the observation was complete, both in the mine and at the surface. Professor Airey has not yet published any of his calculations and deductions, but he has given to the public a brief summary of the results of his experiments. From that we gather that the great difficulty to be overcome was to ascertain the character of the mass of matter in the centre of the globe.

A little reflection is sufficient to show that, if the mean density of the earth be from five to six times that of water, as indicated by previous experiments, the interior of the earth must be considerably heavier than its superstratum, which, so far as we have been able to penetrate, we know to be little less than one half that weight. Now the question arose—How was this to be determined? How were we to ascertain whether the centre of the globe was a mass of matter, probably as dense as gold or platinum? Professor Airey directly saw that if this was the case, it would be most easily settled by observing the number of vibrations made by a pendulum swung at the surface the earth and at the bottom of the deepest mine. The number of vibrations of the pendulum is a correct measure of the power of gravitation; and we penetrate the comparatively light superstrata or crust of the globe, and reach the much denser and heavier mass forming the interior, the attraction of gravitation will be considerably increased, and the effect will be to elerate the vibration of the pendulum—i. e., to make it go quicker. This principle forms the basis of the Harton pit experiments.

The experiments were interesting but intricate, and their results will require many tests before any true data on the subject can be accepted by the philosophical world. This is self evident, when it is requisite that every stratum of stratum lying between the upper and lower pendulums, for the 60 feet of the Harton pit, should have its weight exactly found, as well as its thickness measured. In some places, near the surface, there are clay and shales; in others, as you descend, sandstone, limestone, shale, and then seams of coal. Some of the strata are saturated with water—others are quite dry. These varieties of deposits in their respective conditions must be distinctly estimated and weighed. Difficult, however, as it may appear, all this may be done, and the genius that has hitherto arranged and developed this important experiment will doubtless find means to complete the operation. When that has been done, the next step will be to proceed to determine the weight of the sun, moon, and planets. Truly we live in a glorious age of science, when man puts the firmament itself in the balance, and proclaims the actual weight of each body as it rolls in silent majesty through the boundless realms of illimitability.

The Village of Harton is situated near the sea coast, about two miles south of South Shields, and contains a chapel of ease to the mother church of St. Hilda, whose ministers officiate here. There is also a school, a neat stone building, erected in 1842, which is attended by about forty-five children of both sexes, and is efficiently conducted by Mr. Clark Johnson.

Simonside is the name of a district, partly in Harton township and partly in that of Westoe. It seems to have been included in Aldwin's donation to the abbey of Jarrow, and was anciently called South Preston, to distinguish it from that on the northern bank of the Tyne, but gradually acquired its present name. Simonside Hall, the residence of William Grimshaw, Esq., commands a fine view of Jarrow Slake, the Tyne, and the adjacent country.

SOUTH SHIELDS township comprises an area of 476 acres, and its rateable value is £28,094. Its population in 1801 was 8,108; in 1811, 9,001; in 1821, 8,885; in 1831, 9,074; in 1841, 9,082; and in 1851, 9,625 souls. The principal landowners are the dean and chapter of Durham, who also possess the manorial rights and privileges.

BOROUGH, PORT, AND TOWN OF SOUTH SHIELDS.

This important seaport is situated on the right bank of the Tyne, at its confluence with the German ocean, and opposite to North Shields. It is 5 miles east of Newcastle-on-Tyne, 21 miles north-north-east of Durham, and 276 miles north-west of London. The town is about two miles in length. It has crept along year after year, and age after age, until it stretches the whole distance from the sea to Jarrow Slake, and also extends into the adjoining township of Westoe. South Shields contained in 1851, 28,974 persons, 14,089 of whom were males, and 14,885 females. There were also at the same period 3,430 inhabited houses, 53 uninhabited, and 30 in course of erection. The town is chiefly built on church leasehold property, and comprises spacious streets, elegant squares, and well-constructed houses.

Though South Shields has risen in modern times from an insignificant village, consisting mainly of a few fishermen's huts, to an important and thriving seaport, there is every reason to believe that it was at one time a Roman fort or station, as is evinced by the remains of antiquity which have been discovered here. "A camp containing several acres," says the Rev. Mr. Bruce, stood upon the slightly-elevated headland at South Shields, called The Lawe. The excellence of the situation as a post of observation, is proved by the acts of the pilots, who have planted a beacon and erected many of their dwellings upon it. In 1798, the foundations of many old walls, which obstructed the plough, were removed; the remains of a hypocaust were discovered at the same time. Several coins were also found, and as some of them were of the reign of Valentinian (A.D. 380), it may be presumed that this station was in use only a short time before the desertion of Britain by the Romans. An altar, despoiled of its inscription, which was found at this station, is preserved in the library at Durham. The ancient military way, called the Wreken Dyke, terminated at this station. Until a recent period, one branch of it could be traced by Laygate, the Dean Bridge, and Jarrow Slake, to Gateshead Fell. It also led to Lanchester, Binchester, and the south."

South Shields is scarcely mentioned in our early annals: but we find that by an order made between the town of Newcastle and the prior and convent of Durham, in 1259, among other things it was stipulated, that the tenants of the latter, at South Shields, should have liberty to bake and brew for themselves only, but not for the use of strangers. In 1279, mention of South Shields again occurs. On a trial between the burgesses of Newcastle and the Prior of Tynemouth, a jury, sworn before John Delaval, the king's ice itinerant, found, that the Prior of Tynemouth had built a town upon northern bank of the Tyne, and that the Prior of Durham had built her on the southern, where no town should stand, but only huts for ermen. The Prior of Tynemouth's four ovens at North Shields were d five marks, and both Shields and Tynemouth were forbidden to hold fair market, or to expose for sale meat, drink, or other articles.

n 1489, Lionel Bell, of South Shields, obtained from the Prior of Durham ase for sixty years, of a parcel of land near St. Hilda's Chapel, on which constructed two iron salt pans. This is the earliest notice of the manu- ure of salt, for which this town was once famous, and to this day the nes of districts and places in South Shields bear evidence of the existence his branch of industry. Panwards, Pan-close, and Pan-ash, indicate that ; pans were the chief characteristics of these localities. A tradition vails here that when the plague raged at Shields with great violence, the sons employed about the salt works entirely escaped the infection.

During the parliamentary wars, the fort of South Shields was attacked by Scots under Leslie. The first assault, made on March 15th, 1644, was lantly repulsed by the garrison, headed by Captain Chapman. On the th, the assailants observed a solemn fast, and, on the following day carried place by storm. From this time we hear nothing further of fortifications at ields, until the period of the French war, during which there was a guard use and a battery of four guns on the bank facing the sea; but, soon after a peace of 1815, the guns were removed to Tynemouth,

THE PARISH CHURCH, dedicated to St. Hilda, is an ancient structure ; t from the many repairs and alterations which it has undergone, very little idea n be formed of its original state. It was rebuilt in 1810 and 1811, with e exception of the steeple, the south and west walls, and a portion of the st wall; the pillars forming the isles were removed, and a single roof thrown er the whole structure; the floor was newly paved, and a gallery extended und the north, south, and west sides of the edifice. The church will accom- odate about 2,000 persons, and contains a few mural monuments to the cmory of different families. St. Hilda's was formerly a chapelry under the rish of Jarrow, but has recently been created a separate and distinct parish. he earliest record of the separated rights of the chapelry is contained in the trument of presentation of John de Gyseburne, by John, prior of Durham, a the year 1402. In this document, the chapelry is mentioned as including Les Sheels, Harton, and Wiveston (Westoe); the chaplain is to have a nse, and the lands belonging to it, like his predecessors, half the oblations o Holy Cross, half the offerings of wax, all the petty offerings of churchings, aptisms, and burials; the pence paid for holy bread, the St. Hilda fish ffered by the devout parishioners, and one mark pension from the master of arrow." The parish register commences in 1653. The living is a perpetual uracy, certified at £66 8s. 4d.; gross income, £335. Patrons, the dean and hapter of Durham; incumbent, Rev. James Carr; curate, Rev. Henry J. Nattsford.

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, situated in Commercial-road, is a good stone build- ng, in the early English style, erected in 1834, and consecrated by the Bishop of Chester, in the same year. It comprises nave, aisles, chancel, and square over, in the latter of which is a clock, which is illuminated with gas at night, nd contains 1,200 sittings, 800 of which are free. By an order in council bearing date 11th August, 1848, a district parish has been assigned to this church, which contained, in 1851, a population of 12,513 souls. The living, which is worth £300 per annum, is in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. Thomas Dixon. Rev. Henry Morton, B.A., curate.

ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH, Mile End-road, is a neat structure, in the early English style, erected in 1846, at a cost of £2,500, raised by subscription, aided by government grant. It contains nave, aisles, chancel and neat tower and spire, and possesses 850 sittings, of which 500 are free and unappropriated. This church had also a district parish assigned to it at the same time as Holy Trinity Church, the population of which, in 1851, amounted to 6,287 souls. The living, worth £200 per annum, is in the patronage of the dean and chapter, and the incumbency of the Rev. Samuel B. Brasher, B.A. Rev. Samuel Stewart, B.A., curate.

Besides these churches, there is a chapel-of-ease to St. Hilda's, in Fowler-street; and another to Holy Trinity Church, at Chapel-hill. They are attended by the ministers of their respective churches.

ST. BEDE'S (CATHOLIC) CHURCH is a good brick building, in Cuthbert-street, capable of accommodating about 550 persons. It was formerly the property of another religious body, from whom it was purchased by its present possessors, and altered to suit the rites and ceremonies of their religion. There is a day and Sunday school attached. Rev. Edmund Joseph Kelly, priest.

THE BAPTIST CHAPEL, situated in Barrington-street, is a neat brick building, erected in 1821, at a cost of upwards of £1,000, and will seat about 700 persons. Being built upon glebe land, it is subject to a ground-rent payable to the incumbent of St. Hilda's. Rev. Richard Lancaster, minister.

THE BAPTIST (PARTICULAR) CHAPEL, Mile End-road, is a small building containing sittings for about seventy persons. Rev. George Lawson, minister.

THE INDEPENDENT CHAPEL is in Wallis-street, where it was erected in 1824, at a cost of £1,100. It is a stone structure capable of accommodating about 900 persons, and being built upon glebe land is subject to an annual rent to the incumbent of St. Hilda's. There are schools attached to this chapel. Rev. David W. Rowe, minister.

THE METHODIST NEW CONNEXION CHAPEL, is situated in Johnson-street, and is a good brick edifice, originally erected in 1785, but rebuilt in 1814, at an expense of £1,600. The interior of this chapel is very neat and commodious, and will accommodate near 1,000 persons.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL, East-street, is a plain brick building, capable of accommodating about 400 persons. Rev. Henry Lawson, minister.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL, situated in Frederick-street, is a handsome stone building, in the early English style of architecture, with neat tower and spire, and was erected by private subscription, in 1850, at an expense of £2,000. It contains sittings for 530 persons.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL, Heugh-street, erected in 1779, and enlarged in 1817, will accommodate about 350 persons, and is under the pastoral care of the Rev. Thomas M'Creath.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL (ST. JOHN'S), Savill-street, is a handsome stone structure, containing about 550 sittings. Rev. John Storie, minister.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHAPEL, situated in Cornwallis-street, was built in 1823, and cost £1,600. It is subject to the payment of an annual rent to the incumbent of St. Hilda's Church; and affords accommodation to 600 hearers. There is also a chapel belonging to the same body at Chapter-row.

SALEM ASSOCIATION CHAPEL, Queen-street, was built by the Particular artists, in 1824, and cost upwards of £800. It contains sittings for about 100 persons, and is under the pastoral care of the Rev. Richard Chew.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CHAPEL, situated in Chapter-row, is a handsome, well-finished brick building, erected in 1808, at a cost of £3,800, and possesses sittings for 2,000 persons. The organ is a fine-toned instrument; Miss Margaret Oliver, organist. There are also Wesleyan Chapels in Wellington-street and Templetown.

THE CHARITY SCHOOL.—Christopher Maughan, by his will, dated March 17, 1749, directed that after the demise of his nephew, William Maughan, the principal and the interest thereof might be applied towards the foundation of a school in South Shields. He also left the rents and profits of some lands for the same object. Ann Aubone, who deceased about 1760, by her will, directed her executors to pay the sum of £100 towards founding and supporting a charity-school in South Shields for the education of poor children. A school was established in South Shields about the year 1769; and the trustees received £100 in respect of the pecuniary legacy of Christopher Maughan, and the further sum of £100 on account of the rents, &c., of the lands, as above mentioned. They also received from the executors of Mrs. Aubone £100, and various other donations and benefactions. In 1797, the trustees became possessed of upwards of £1,000, which they invested in the purchase of £5,004 15s. 5d. Three-per-Cent Consols. About the year 1792, John Redhead bequeathed for the use of the school, £400 stock Three-per-Cent Consols. These various bequests produce an income of between £80 and £90 per annum, which together with a portion of the amount of Mrs. Hazenby's Charity, and the proceeds of sermons, occasionally preached for the benefit of the charity, are applied towards the support of the school. The school occupies a building in Coronation-street, which was erected in 1748, and is attended by 140 boys, and 160 girls. The whole of the orphan children are taught free. James Cromwell and Mary Jane Wardle, teachers. JARROW CHEMICAL COMPANY'S SCHOOL, situated at Barnes' Houses, is a good, substantial brick building, erected in 1849-50, at a cost of £2,000, for the education of the children of the workmen employed in the chemical works, and for those of the neighbourhood generally. The school is under government inspection, and is attended by about 200 children of both sexes. The teaching staff, which is very efficient, consists of a head master, an assistant master, two female teachers, and four pupil teachers. Duncan, master, head master.

HOLY TRINITY NATIONAL SCHOOL, a neat, convenient building, situated in the Commercial-road, was erected in 1835, and is attended by 150 boys and 40 girls. James Wight and Mary Hanning, teachers.

ST. BEDE'S (CATHOLIC) SCHOOL is attached to the Catholic Church, and has an average attendance of 80 children. William Noonan, teacher.

ST. JOHN'S SESSIONAL SCHOOLS, East Winchester-street, were erected in 1847, at an expense of £1,200, £400 of which was granted by the Committee of Privy Council on Education, and the remainder was raised by subscriptions. The building is of brick, and is attended by 70 boys, 40 girls, and 30 infants. David Justice and Agnes Hutchinson, teachers.

ST. STEPHEN'S NATIONAL SCHOOLS are situated in Mile End-road, where they were erected in 1853, at a cost of £1,500, which was defrayed by grants from the Privy Council, the various societies for the promotion of education, and by private subscriptions. The Boys' School is attended by 150 children, and is efficiently conducted by Mr. John Port, the head master, aided by an assistant master and three pupil teachers. The Girls' School has an average attendance of 100, and is under the superintendence of Miss Marga. Clague, and assistants. The Infants' School numbers 130 pupils, and is conducted by Miss Ellen Phillips, and assistants. The schools are under government inspection.

THE UNION SCHOOL, Waterloo Vale, is a commodious brick structure erected in 1834, and has an average attendance of 100 boys and 90 girls. The school is supported by subscription. John Thomas and Elizabeth C. are teachers.

WESTON NATIONAL SCHOOL, situated in the same building as the chapel-of-ease, in Fowler-street, was built by subscription in 1818, at a cost of £2,100, under the following circumstances. The want of additional chapel accommodation, and a public charity school in South Shields, having been long apparent to the inhabitants, a subscription was commenced in 1817, in which the dean and chapter of Durham contributed £1,000, and Lord Crewe trustees £500; and, on the 11th August, 1817, a deed of bargain and sale was signed for the foundation and establishment of a chapel and charity school, to be vested in trust with the dean and chapter, the incumbents of South Shields, and the trustees of Lord Crewe. The chapel and school are still used for the purposes for which they were erected; the school is chiefly supported by subscriptions and the payments of the children. The average attendance is 230. Francis and Mrs. Mason, teachers.

In addition to these, there are several other schools, the situation of which, with the names of their teachers, will be found in the directory.

THE LITERARY, SCIENTIFIC, AND MECHANICAL INSTITUTION, Fowler-street, was established in 1825, for the purpose of "diffusing useful knowledge generally, but more especially to advance the arts, by instructing artisans in such branches as admit of practical application." The institution possesses a valuable and well selected library of nearly 4,000 volumes in the various departments of literature, science, and art, and also several chemical and mathematical instruments. R. Ingham, Esq., M.P., president; Thomas Scott, treasurer; J. Nevison and J. P. Elliott, secretaries; James Rolson, librarian.

THE SOUTH SHIELDS AND WESTON DISPENSARY, 59, East King-street, was founded in 1821, for the relief of the sick poor, under the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. The number of persons admitted to its benefits during the past year amounted to 1,225, while the total number admitted since the commencement of this most useful institution is upwards of 35,910. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham; treasurer, William Anderson, Esq.; physician, Dr. Brown; consulting surgeon, Mr. Toshach; surgeons, Messrs. Wallis, Frain, and Birkett; house surgeon, Mr. John M. Charlton.

THE MASTER MARINERS' ASYLUM AND ANNUITY SOCIETY was established in 1839, under the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, and has for its objects the building of an asylum, and the providing of an annuity fund for aged and infirm master mariners, and their widows and orphans. There are already twenty-two cottages, pleasantly situated on the east side of the town, near the sea, which were erected at the expense of Thomas M. Winterbottom, Esq., M.D.

THE SOUTH SHIELDS LOYAL STANDARD ASSOCIATION was founded by the seamen in October, 1824, for mutual assistance in time of distress; and was certified and enrolled in accordance with the requirements of the legislature in April, 1832. The meetings are held in the association hall, Fowler-street.

and the office is in the same street. Trustees, Robert Wallis, Esq., Errington Bell, Esq., and John Robinson, Esq. : secretary, Mr. John Jobling.

THE TOWN HALL, a neat building, occupying the centre of the Market-place, with a colonnade beneath, was erected by the dean and chapter of Durham, about the year 1768, and now serves for the meetings, &c., of the corporation. Petty Sessions for the borough are held in the police station, Waterloo Vale, every Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday; and for the South Shields petty sessional district of the east division of Chester Ward, on Tuesdays and Fridays. For list of Magistrates, &c., see the end of the volume.

SOUTH SHIELDS BATHS AND WASHHOUSES are situated in John-street, Southbert-street, and occupy a neat building, erected by the corporation, in 1854, at a cost of £3,000. The edifice contains four first-class baths, twelve second-class, with vapour and shower baths; and departments for washing, &c., which are fitted up in the most modern and approved manner. There are also offices and apartments for the resident superintendent, Mr. John Atkinson.

GAS AND WATER SUPPLY.—South Shields was first lighted with gas in October, 1824, but the works have been considerably enlarged since that period, in consequence of the increasing consumption of the town and neighbourhood. The works are situated in St. Hilda's-lane and Oyston-street, and contain four gasometers, capable of containing nearly 80,000 feet of gas, which is supplied to the public at 4s. per 1,000 cubic feet. John Dixon Lister, secretary; William Sanderson, manager. The water is supplied by the Sunderland and South Shields Water Company, which was formed by act of parliament in 1852. John Mearns, manager.

MARKETS, FAIRS, &c.—Markets are held here every Saturday, and are well supplied with butcher's meat, vegetables, &c. The ancient market-day is Wednesday, but it has now become obsolete. Fairs are held on the Wednesday before May 1st, and the Wednesday before and after November 11th. Shipbuilding is carried on here largely, and there are manufactories of glass and soap, breweries, roperies, &c; but the main business of the town has relation to the coal trade. The banking business of South Shields is carried on by the National Provincial Bank of England, the Northumberland and Durham District Bank, and the Union Bank. There is also a Savings Bank, situated in Barrington-street, which was established in 1817, though the building in which it is at present held was not erected till 1824. Actuary, Robert Dawson; secretary, John Nevison. For hours of business, &c., see Directory.

THE PORT, &c.—South Shields formed, until recent years, a portion of the port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne; but about six years ago, it and North Shields were constituted a distinct port, and are now known as the port of Shields. The Tyne mouth forms a safe haven, of sufficient depth to suit vessels of any tonnage, except on the bar of sand which crosses it, where there is little more than seven feet of water at the ebb. On the west side of this barrier there are many dangerous rocks, rendering three light-houses necessary for the safety of the harbour. The Custom House is situated at North Shields, and has a branch office in Ferry-street. If the shipping could possibly admit of such a thing, the two Shields certainly deserve a bridge of connection as much as any two similarly situated towns in England, for both of them are places of great trade, and much intercourse is maintained between them. But a bridge is out of the question where so many top-masts rear their heads, especially as the lowness of the banks do not admit of such a high-level bridge as that at Newcastle. Communication is at present kept up by means of ferry-boats, which leave Comical Corner every five minutes, and Alum House Ham every quarter of an hour.

SHIPPING.—The coal trade has contributed greatly to the wealth, importance, and population of the town, and, since the formation of the port of Shields, its shipping has much increased. According to the latest authority, the number of the ships and their tonnage belonging to the port were as follows:—Ships, 702; tonnage, 183,328; steam vessels, 76; tonnage, 1,577.

COMMERCE.—South Shields occupies a fine position for commerce, situated as it is, at the mouth of the Tyne, and there is no doubt, now that it has been created a separate port from Newcastle, but that its importance in a commercial point of view will rapidly increase. The chief imports are timber, iron, hemp, flax, tallow, hides, &c.; the exports are those connected with the manufactories &c. of the district, and consist of coals, coke, iron in its various forms, glass, &c. In the year ending 1851, the custom duties on goods charged with duty at first landing from importing ships at Shields, amounted to £2,122 18s. 7d.; on goods warehoused, whether imported directly from foreign parts, or removed under bond from other warehousing ports, £75,109 2s.; total, £77,232 0s. 7d. On the Lawe is the Look-out House for pilots, erected, in 1840, by the master and brethren of the Trinity House, Newcastle. Robert Blair in charge.

BOROUGH, CORPORATION, &c.—The borough of South Shields, the parliamentary and municipal boundaries of which are co-extensive, comprises the townships of South Shields and Westoe, which are divided into South Shields, Jarrow, and Westoe Wards, and is governed by a mayor, eight aldermen, and twenty-four councillors, under the usual corporate style. The borough was enfranchised by the Reform Bill, and now returns one member to the imperial parliament; Robert Ingham, Esq., of Westoe, being the present member. Besides the petty sessions already noticed, two other courts held here are the court baron and court leet, both of the dean and chapter of Durham as lords of the manor of Westoe. The County Court for the recovery of debts under £50 is held here monthly; the office is in Barrington-street. Henry Staplyton, Esq., judge; John E. Marshall, chief clerk; C. A. Wawn, assistant clerk.

For the names of the members of the corporation, and the corporate officers, see the end of the volume.

THE SOUTH SHIELDS POOR-LAW UNION comprises an area of 15,477 acres, and its population in 1851 was 35,790 souls. It is divided into the same districts of South Shields and Westoe, the former of which embraces the townships of South Shields, Hedworth, Monkton, and Jarrow; and the latter the parishes of Boldon and Whitburn, with the townships of Harton and Westoe. The total expenditure of the union for the half-year ending September 29th, 1855, was £1,434 17s. 7½d. The Union Workhouse, situated in Ocean-street, is a good brick building, capable of accommodating 200 persons. The average number of inmates is about 140. William Goddard, master; Margaret Goddard, matron; James Williamson, surgeon; Thomas Salmon, clerk.

CHARITIES.—Besides the schools, which are noticed elsewhere, South Shields possesses the following charities:—Glazonby's Charity.—Margaret Glazonby, widow, by her will, bearing date 21st of March, 1810, bequeathed £200, to be paid to five or more inhabitants of the chapelry of St. Hilda, in South Shields, who should place the same out at interest, or in the public funds, and dispose of the yearly produce towards the educating and clothing of poor children belonging to the charity-school in South Shields, in such manner as the trustees should think proper. The sum of £200 was laid out in the purchase of £375 Three-per-Cent Consols, and the dividends are disposed of as directed, Hood's Charity.—William Hood, mariner, by his will, bearing date 30th August, 1788, gave to the curate and churchwardens and their successors for the time being, for the chapelry of St. Hilda, £20 upon trust, to place the same out at interest, and at their discretion to distribute the same on the first day of every new year, amongst the poor people of the said chapelry. The amount of this legacy is now placed in the Savings Bank at South Shields; and the interest is distributed every New Year's Day, by the incumbent and chapelwardens, amongst the poor.

Westoe township comprises an area of 2,070 acres, and its rateable value is £34,605. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 2,903; in 1811, 6,164; in 1821, 7,618; in 1831, 9,682; in 1841, 13,990; and in 1851, 19,340 souls. The principal landowners are the dean and chapter of Durham, who also possess the manorial rights, Robert Ingham, Esq., M.P., William M. Wallis Esq., Thomas Forsyth, Esq., Messrs. Cookson and Co., the executors of John Rippon, Esq., John Blenkinsop, Esq., and the executors of George F. Fox, Esq. The greater portion of this township now forms part of the town of South Shields.

The Village of Westoe is situated about a mile south of South Shields, with which place its Directory, &c., is included.

USWORTH DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish, which has been recently formed from the parish of Washington, embraces the township of Great and Little Usworth, and a portion of that of North Biddick.

USWORTH township comprises an area of 2,548 acres, and its rateable value is £7,719 12s. 6d. Its population in 1801 was 1,236; in 1811, 1,277; in 1821, 1,305; in 1831, 1,477; in 1841, 1,974; and in 1851, 2,051 souls. Coal is abundant in this township; and at North Biddick there are coke, fire-brick, and rope manufactories, with iron foundries and iron works. We learn from Boldon Book that the manor of Usworth formerly performed heavy services. Great Usworth paid 30s. for cornage, provided one milch cow, and one man for castle-ward, eight chalders of malt, as many of meal, and as many of oats; each carucate (the demesne excepted) ploughed and harrowed two acres. The villains were to prepare in tillage for seed four portions of land, with twenty-six men to each portion; and the services they used to perform at Washington, they, at the time of the compilation of the record, rendered at Gateshead; further, they carried annually one pipe of wine and one mill-stone to Durham. The Drenge fed a horse a-day, bore his part in the great hunt with two greyhounds and five cords of provisions, followed the court of pleas, and served on messages. The mill paid ten shillings rent. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, the whole of the services had been commuted into money payments. This vill was for many ages the property of the Hiltches, and shared the general dispersion of their estates. It is now possessed by Viscount Boyne, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, the heirs of the late J. C. Bailett Esq., T. B. Wall, Esq., the heirs of the late William Peareth, Esq., and Lord Ravensworth.

The Village of Great Usworth is situated on the declivity of a rocky hill, about two miles north of Washington. A library was established here in 1854, and now contains about 500 volumes.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a neat stone structure, erected in 1832, and contains 410 sittings, the most of which are free. Rev. Thompson Thackeray, incumbent.

There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Primitive Methodists have one at Little Usworth.

Freat Usworth School was built and endowed, in 1814, by the late Susan Usworth. The endowment consists of £1,000, which is invested in the Three-Cent Consols, and the interest, amounting to £80 per annum, is paid to the master. James Landells, teacher.

Little Usworth is an estate in this township, and was anciently held by the derbys, from whom it was transferred by marriage to the Stanhopes. It was afterwards held by the Swynnows, and Lawsons, with the latter of whom it still remains.

North Biddick is a hamlet in this township, six miles west of Sunderland, and four miles north-north-east of Chester-le-street. In the neighbourhood of Wear, on this estate, is situated "Worm Hill," where the fabulous worm dragon (see Lambton), is said to have "lapped itself nine times round, leaving vermicular traces, of which grave living witnesses depose that they have seen the vestiges."

WASHINGTON PARISH.

This parish, which comprises the townships of Barmston and Washington, is bounded on the north by Jarrow, on the west by Chester-le-Street and the chapelry of Lamesley, on the south and south-east by the Wear, and on the east by Monkwearmouth.

BARNSTON township contains 893 acres, the property of the Marchioness of Londonderry, and its rateable value is £1,748 10s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 49; in 1811, 48; in 1821, 79; in 1831, 73; in 1841, 100; and in 1851, 210 souls. Barnston was anciently possessed by the Hays, by whom it was sold, in 1660, to the Lilburns, for £2,750, and, in 1700, passed to the Tempests, with whom it has since remained. This township is about five miles west of Sunderland. For Directory see Washington.

WASHINGTON township is principally the property of Sir James Mosgen, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and Robert D. Shafto, Esq. Its area is 1,894 acres, and its rateable value £5,734. The population in 1801 was 1,190; in 1811, 1,264; in 1821, 1,243; in 1831, 1,123; in 1841, 941; and in 1851, 1,000 souls. This manor was held, about the year 1180, by the Hertburn family, who subsequently assumed the local name. At the time of the compilation of the Boldon Book, the vill was held by a free rent of four pounds, and by the service of attending the bishop's great hunt with two greyhounds. When common aid was imposed, the taxation was not to exceed one mark. In 1350, William de Washington had license to settle the manor of himself, his wife Catharine, and his own right heirs. The direct line failed previous to 1400; and Dionisia, the last surviving heiress of the family, married Sir William Tempest, of Studley. From the Tempests it was transferred by marriage to the Mallorys, by whom it was sold, in 1613, for £4,000, to William James, Bishop of Durham, and it afterwards descended to his co-heiresses. It is now in the possession of the proprietors above mentioned. The North-Eastern Railway passes through this township, and has a station about a mile and a quarter from the village.

The Village of Washington is about six-and-a-half miles south-south-east of Newcastle, and about the same distance west of Sunderland. An agricultural and horticultural show takes place here annually in August.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a neat stone edifice rebuilt in 1831, on the site of the old church, at a cost of nearly £1,100, which was raised by subscriptions and by grants from the church building societies. It consists of nave and chancel, and contains about 400 sittings, the most of which are free and unappropriated. The parish register commences in 1613. The living is a rectory, valued in the Liber Regis at £18; gross income £1,001. The tithes were commuted in 1840; aggregate amount £1,000. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, the Hon. and Rev. Lewis William Denman, M.A.

The School is principally supported by contributions from the Bishop of Durham, the Marchioness of Londonderry, Sir William Lawson, and Lady Crewe's Charity.

Washington Colliery, which is situated a little west of the village, is very extensive. It was the scene of an awful explosion on the night of August 18th, 1851, when 34 men and boys lost their lives, and many more were seriously injured.

Washington Row is a hamlet in this township, and contains a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel. Washington Staiths is another hamlet, where there is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Association, and extensive chemical and fire-brick works.

Charities.—The sum of £100, the origin of which is unknown, but which by the parliamentary returns in 1786, appears to have comprised a legacy left by Thomas Robinson, in 1722, and the like sum by John Hopper, in 1798, was laid out in 1798 by William Peareth, in whose hands the money been placed, in the purchase of £210 Three-per-Cent Consols. The amount of the dividends, £6 6s. per annum, is divided as follows:—Township of Washington, £2 13s.; ditto of Usworth and Biddick, £2 13s.; ditto of Barmston, £1. These sums are given to the overseers of each township, and by them distributed to the poor.—Dr. Triplets' Charity: For an account of this charity see Whitburn.

WHITBURN PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Jarrow, on the west by Boldon, on the south by Monkwearmouth, and on the east by the German Ocean. It comprises the townships of Cleadon and Whitburn, whose united area is 94 acres. Its population in 1801 was 675; in 1811, 843; in 1821, 856; in 1831, 1,001; in 1841, 1,061; and in 1851, 1,203 souls.

CLEADON township is chiefly the property of G. T. Fox, Esq., C. Allison, Esq., Thomas Gibbons, Esq., the Misses Ormston, and several small proprietors. The acreage, population, &c., are returned with the parish. At the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, the bishop's manor of Cleadon and Whitburn was occupied by twenty-eight villans, whose tenures, rents, and services were the same as those of Boldon. There were twelve cottagers, and a punder in the same servitude as those of Boldon; and the two villans paid 1s. cornage, and provided two milch cows. The demesne was on lease, with a stock of five draughts and a half, five harrows and a half, and paid, for interest of the two draughts and a half, twenty chalders of wheat, twenty oats, and ten of barley; and in money for the other three draughts, sixteen marks. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, the rents and services were altered. There is a station on the North-Eastern Railway, on the south side of the township.

The Village of Cleadon is about a mile and a half west-north-west of Whitburn, and contains a small Methodist chapel.

Biddick is an estate lying to the north-west of Cleadon, adjoining Jarn on the south, and is partly in this parish and partly in that of Boldon.

Marston Rock.—"From the Lizard Point, near Whitburn, northward to Marston," says Mackenzie, "the whole coast is wild, broken, and singularly picturesque. Immense insulated masses of freestone are thrown together in confusion, intersected by deep gullies, or scooped out into vast caverns. The huge rock, called by way of eminence Marston Rock, now stands entirely detached from the coast by the violence of the sea, and at high water is about ninety yards distant from the land; though within the memory of persons living, it could once be reached by a plank. A large aperture has been formed in the body of this rock, through which boats frequently pass at convenient stages of the tide. Adjacent to the shore near this rock is the Vale Bed, a small island covered with smooth grass, and which is often the scene of festivity and amusement during the bathing season. About a mile north of Souter Point, a fine spring of medicinal water issues from the rock: it is so far below tide mark as to be only accessible at the lowest spring tides."

Farding Lake, the seat and property of Mrs. Elizabeth Ness, is pleasantly situated, a short distance west of the ocean, and commands a beautiful prospect of Tynemouth and neighbourhood.

WHITBURN township is principally held by Sir Hedworth Williamson. Bar Henry Hudson, Esq., Thomas Barnes, Esq., C. Milner, Esq., Edward Dalrymple, Esq., Mrs. Burdon, and others. For acreage, &c., see parish returns. Whitburn and Cleadon have always been members of the great episcopal manor of Chester-le-Street, and hence few freehold estates of any importance occur in either vill. Several copper coins of Constantine, Licinius, Maxentius, and Maximian have been found here.

The Village of Whitburn is pleasantly situated on the southern declivity of an eminence, commanding a beautiful prospect of the surrounding country. To the north of the village, the Lizard commands a landscape not less varied than extensive: immediately to the south-east, Souter Point, the most projecting point of land between the Wear and Tyne; the grotesque rock of Marston; and, beyond, a fine curve of the shore, and bold, jutting head-and, crowned with the shattered monastery of Tynemouth; and, further still, Hartley, and the semi-isles at the mouth of its rivulet.

The Church is an ancient structure, in the Gothic style, consisting of nave and chancel, with tower and short spire, and contains a few mural and other monuments. The parish register commences in 1579. The living is a rectory, valued in the Liber Regis at £39 19s. 4½d; gross income, £1,247. The glebe lies to the west of the village, and contains nearly 200 acres; the rector is entitled to the tithes generally throughout the parish. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, the Rev. Thomas Baker, M.A.

The Rectory, which is beautifully situated, is a handsome and convenient residence, erected in 1816.

Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel.

The Parochial School is a neat building, erected in 1824, and will accommodate about 100 children. It is in the patronage of the rector, who pays for the education of thirty poor children. Isaac Huntly, teacher. There is no other school, which is principally supported by the rector, and conducted by Mr. John Blain.

A Library and Reading Room has been established here, under the auspices of Sir Hedworth Williamson, Bart.; it now comprises nearly 400 volumes, and is well supplied with the leading journals and periodicals of the day. Sir Hedworth Williamson, Bart., president; Robert Cook, Esq., secretary and treasurer; John Stamp, librarian.

Whitburn Hall, which has long been the seat of the Williamsons, is an old spacious mansion, adjoining the rectory grounds on the west.

Bents is a small hamlet on the sea shore in this township, where the fishing boats are moored, and the bathing machines stationed.

Charities.—The Rev. Thomas Triplett, M.A., who was rector of Whitburn, from 1681 to 1662, was ejected during the parliamentary wars, but after the restoration, was made prebendary of Westminster and D.D. By his last will he bequeathed £800, the interest of which he directed to be divided equally every year to the parishes of Woodhorn, Washington, and Whitburn, to bind up the poor children apprentices, &c.

CHESTER WARD—MIDDLE DIVISION.

This division of Chester Ward comprises the parishes and parochial chapels of Birtley, Chester-le-Street, Lamesley, Pelton, and Tanfield.

BIRTLEY DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish, which comprises the townships of Birtley and Hareton, was formed by an order in council, dated 8th January, 1850, from the ancient and extensive parish of Chester-le-Street.

BIRTLEY township contains 1,392 acres; the principal landowners are the Earl of Durham, Lord Ravensworth, Lady Noel Byron, Messrs. Mattisens, Henry Towers, Esq., Miss Grace Humble, and the Birtley Freeholders. The population in 1801 was 1,026; in 1811, 1,094; in 1821, 1,386; in 1831, 1,520; in 1841, 1,759; and in 1851, 1,833 souls. Here are extensive iron works and collieries in the occupation of the Birtley Iron Company. The manor was anciently held by a family bearing the local name; but, in 1366, the estate came to two heiresses. The eldest sold her share to Ralph Lord Neville; and this moiety was included in the forfeiture of the Earl of Westmoreland, in 1570, and was granted to Robert Catcheside and William Carr. The other portion of the manor was transferred by marriage to the Egton family; and in the third descent, a part became vested in the Blenkinsops. Other parts were held by the Maddisons and the Halls.

The Village of Birtley is about three miles north of Chester-le-Street, and is chiefly inhabited by the workmen employed in the neighbouring collieries and iron-works.

The Church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a handsome structure, in the Norman style, erected in 1850, at an expense of £2,000, towards which the Ecclesiastical Commissioners gave £200, the Incorporated Society for the Erection, &c., of Churches £220, John Warwick, Esq., £1,000, and the remainder was raised by subscription. It comprises a nave, chancel, and square western tower, and contains 400 free sittings. The living is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the incumbent of Chester-le-Street. Rev. Francis William Bewsher, curate.

The Parsonage House is a commodious dwelling, in the Elizabethan style, situated near the church, and was erected in 1851, at a cost of £800.

The Catholic Church, a neat Gothic edifice, erected in 1842, at a cost of £1,500, is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Joseph, and consists of nave, aisles, and chancel, with an open belfry. The presbytery and school adjoin the church. Rev. John Swale, O.S.B., priest.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here.

Birtley Hall is the residence of Mrs. John Hunt, and Birtley White House, that of Miss Sarah Humble.

Brown's Buildings and Porto Bello are hamlets in this township.

HARRATON township contains 2,394 acres, and its rateable value is £6,432 10s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 1,607; in 1811, 1,759; in 1821, 2,217; in 1831, 2,171; in 1841, in consequence of the collieries of the district being nearly exhausted, it had decreased to 1,601; and in 1851, it was 1,614. The principal proprietors are the Earl of Durham, Charles Coliffe, Esq., Messrs. Trevelyan and Witham, Lady Noel Byron, and the trustees of the late Joseph Atkinson, Esq. The township contains collieries, copperas manufactories, and lampblack works. "Harraton, anciently Haverhune," says Mackenzie, "was granted by Bishop Flambard to his kinsman William, whose descendants assumed the local name, de Herrington. After some time, Harraton was in possession of the family of Darcy, and then by marriage and exchange or purchase, was vested in the Hedworths, who held, at their highest pitch of elevation, besides Harraton, the manor of Southwick, the grange of Saltwellside, Urpeth, Ricleden, lands in Cleadon, Whitburn, Scoteshouse, Jarrow, Hedworth, and Sunderland, and in Moorhouse and Picktree, part of West Herrington, Burnigall, and lands in Woodham, Brafferton, and Bursblades." The tenure of the manor of Harraton is uniformly stated at one knight's fee.

Chater's Haugh, a village adjoining to Fatfield, in this township, was formerly the property of the Hedworths and Jacksons. It is about three miles north-east of Chester-le-Street, and contains a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, and a school in which the Primitive Methodists meet for worship on Sunday mornings; the incumbent of Birtley performing service in the afternoons.

Fatfield is another village in Harraton township, situated on the north bank of the Wear, three miles north-east of Chester-le-Street.

Hugh Haugh, a hamlet in this township, is two-and-three-quarter miles north-east of Chester-le-Street. Nova Scotia is another hamlet, two miles north-by-east of Chester-le-Street, and is principally inhabited by colliers.

Pelaw, an estate in Harraton township, is about one mile north of Chester-le-Street, and was formerly held by a family bearing the local name, with whom it continued till 1881, when it was sold to the Elmeden family. It afterwards passed by marriage to the Bulmers, and subsequently became the property of the Lambton family, the present proprietors.

Picktree is a hamlet, one mile and a half north-by-west of Chester-le-Street, and was in ancient times the property of the Lambtons and Hedworths. It is now held by the Earl of Durham.

CHESTER-LE-STREET PARISH.

This extensive and populous parish comprises, exclusive of the chapelries of Lamesley and Tanfield, the townships of Chester-le-Street, Edmonstley, Lambton,* Lumley (Great), Lumley (Little), Plawsworth, and Waldrige. The townships included in the district parishes of Birtley and Pelton were formerly a portion of this parish, from which they were separated on the formation of the new parishes. Previous to its division Chester-le-Street parish was nine miles in length from Ayton Banks on the north to Plawsworth on the south, and its greatest breadth from east to west was about seven miles. It was bounded on the north by Gateshead and Whickham; on the west by Lanchester; on the south by the chapelry of St. Margaret, in the suburbs of Durham, Witton Gilbert, and Kimbleworth; on the south-east by Houghton-le-Spring; and on the east by Washington. A general enclosure of the common lands within the parish took place under an act of parliament, 84 George III., 1794, when the several wastes of Chester South Moor,

* The three townships of Lambton, Lumley (Great), and Lumley (Little), lie to the east of the Wear, in Easington Ward.

West Moor, Plawsworth Moor, Edmonsley Moor, Whitehall Moor, and Pelton Moor, containing about 1,500 acres, were divided, according to the nature of the ancient estate, sixpence an acre being reserved to the see of Durham for ever. The manor has remained constantly invested in the see of Durham, and includes Boldon, the Cleadon, Whitburn, and the copyholds of the parish of Chester.

TOWNSHIP AND TOWN OF CHESTER-LE-STREET.

CHESTER-LE-STREET township contains 2,666 acres, and its rateable value is 3,948 lls. 9d. Its population in 1801 was 1,669; in 1811, 1,726; in 1821, 1,892; in 1831, 1,910; in 1841, 2,599; and in 1851, 2,580 souls. The principal landowners are the Earl of Durham, J. and T. Cookson, Esqs., Messrs. Trevelyan and Witham, Richard A. Nelson, Esq., and Thomas George Murray, Esq. Here is an iron and brass foundry, a brick and tile works, a paper mill, and two collieries. At the time of the compilation of the Boldon Book, this township, with the villain service, and the demesne, the mill and fisheries, was held on a lease for twenty-four marks. When Latfield's Survey was made, the lands were divided in the usual manner, free tenants, bond tenants, cottagers, and exchequer lands. The manor, mill, and shery in the Wear, appear to have been objects of some importance, and, in 1528, were leased by Cardinal Wolsey, under £4 rent, with license to cut sufficient wood for repairs.

The ancient Town of Chester-le-Street, whose name causes the mind to revert to the Roman and Saxon periods of our history, is pleasantly situated in a valley to the west of the river Wear, about 6 miles north of Durham, 9 miles west-south-west of Sunderland, and 262 north-north-west of London. It is supposed by Camden to occupy the site of the Condercum of the Romans, and to have been garrisoned by the first wing of the Astures; but this conjecture is unsupported by any inscription or other remains of antiquity. During the Saxon period it bore the name of Cuncestre, or Cunsagestre, and was known by that designation when the monks of Lindisfarne, headed by their bishop, Eardulph, settled here, and founded the see of Chester-le-Street (See page 184). This bishopric continued for 113 years, and was held by nineteen prelates, the last of whom, Aldune, was the first Bishop of Durham. On the removal of the see to Durham, in 995, Chester-le-Street became first a rectorial, and afterwards, under Bishop Beck, a collegiate church, in which condition it remained till the dissolution of the religious houses.

Leland, who travelled in the reign of Henry VIII, gives the following description of the town. "From Duresme," he says, "over Framgate-bridge to Chester in the Street, partly by a little corne ground but most by mountainouse pasture and mores and firres. Or I came in Chester, I saw scant half a mile of it Lomeley Castel upon a hill, having praty woode about it; and about Chester self is likewise some woode. The toune of Chester is chiefly one streate of very meane building in height. There is beside a smaull streate or two about the church collegiate, that hath a dean and prebendaries, but it is a very meane building; and in the body of the church is a tumbe, with the image of a byshop, in token that St. Cuthbert was buried or remained in his feretre there. At the very end of the towne I passed over Conebrook, and there is a fair stone bridge of three arches over it. Thens to Gateshead vii miles, by mountainouse ground, with pasture, heth more, and firres, and a little on this side Gateshead is a great cole-pit." The town, at present, extends about half a mile along the great north road, and contains a number of excellent houses. Another more irregular line of buildings runs east and west, at right angles to the former, along the Cone and Chester brook. The whole place has, however, a clean and comfortable appearance; and though its ancient weekly market is now obsolete, yet a considerable traffic in the necessaries of life is maintained with the industrial population of the neighbourhood. The old narrow bridge across the Cone was removed in 1821, and the present one erected. On taking down part of the old structure a copper coin, supposed to be of the reign of James I., was found amongst the ruins. The town and neighbourhood suffered considerably by the floods on the 17th November, 1771, when nearly 600 feet of the main street was covered with water, and much damage done to the shops and houses.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Cuthbert, is a handsome stone structure, presenting many marks of antiquity. It comprises nave, aisle, chancel, and western tower; the latter is terminated by a light and elegant spire 156 feet high, which is said to be the handsomest of the kind in the north of England. The interior of the church is neat, and contains a singular arrangement of monuments, with effigies of various members of the noble family of Lumley, beginning with Liulph, the minister of Bishop Walcher,* and ending with Lord John Lumley, who died in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. There are also several mural monuments to the memory of different individuals. There were formerly two chantries in the church, but the names of their founders are not known; the one dedicated to St. Mary, was of the yearly value of £5 8s. 10d.; and the other, called St. George's, was worth £5 3s. per annum. On the removal of the bishopric of Chester to Durham, this church became a parochial rectory, until Bishop Beck, in 1286, made it collegiate, consisting of a dean, seven prebendaries, five chaplains, three deacons, and other ministers. Under this establishment the church of Chester continued till the dissolution of collegiate churches and chantries, in the first year of Edward VI.; when by virtue of the statute, the deanery, prebends, rectory, and several rights of the church became vested in the crown. The prebends of the seven portionists, with the vicarage or deanery of this church, were taxed in the Lincoln valuation, 20th Edward I., 1291, at £146 13s. 4d.; but in the 20th Henry VIII., 1534, the deanery and seven prebends were valued at no more than £77 12s. 8d. in the whole, viz. the deanery, £41; prebend of Lamesley, £5 16s. 8d.; Pelton, £5 16s. 8d.; Chester, £6; second prebend of Lamesley, £10; Tanfield, £3 6s. 8d.; Birdley, £3 6s. 8d.; and Urpeth, £2 6s. The living is now a perpetual curacy, not in charge; gross income, £480. The parish register commences in 1582. Lady Byron and H. Joliffe, Esq., are the patrons, and present alternately. Rev. Joseph Price, Rev. J. P. Depledge, and the Rev. E. J. Towne, curates.

Bethel Independent Chapel is a commodious structure, erected in 1814, and will accommodate about 400 persons. Attached to the chapel is a Sunday school, which was built in 1853, at a cost of £260; it is also used as a lecture-room, and will seat 200 persons. Rev. Charles Pedley, minister.

The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have also places of worship here. The National School is a neat and substantial structure, containing separate apartments for boys and girls, and has an average attendance of 150 children. It is under government inspection, and is conducted by William Smith and Isabella Oliver, the former of whom is assisted by two pupil teachers.

and has accommodation for 100 pupils. James P. Purvis, teacher. There are also three ladies' schools in the town.

The Mechanics' Institute and Reading Room was established in 1826, under the patronage of the Earl of Durham. The reading room is well supplied with the leading papers and periodicals, and the library contains about 500 volumes. John Owen, treasurer; John Nicholson, secretary; Mary Jobling, librarian.

Petty Sessions are held at Mrs. Lowson's, Lambton Arms Hotel, once a month. Edward Johnson, Esq., chairman; T. C. May, solicitor, clerk to the magistrates.—A Court Leet of the Bishop of Durham is held annually at Mr. Burn's, the Queen's Head Inn. Joseph Davidson, Esq., agent; Thomas Burn, bailiff.

The Gas Works are situated in Chester-burn. Thomas Murray, Esq., treasurer; Matthew Potts, secretary; Thomas Dundas, manager.

The Savings Bank is at Mr. Simon Robinson's, and is open on Mondays from seven to eight p.m. Matthew Potts, actuary.

Chester-le-Street Poor-law Union comprises an area of 83,079 acres, and its population in 1851 was 20,907 souls. It is divided into the sub-districts of Chester-le-Street and Harraton; the former of which contains the townships of Cocken, Bourn Moor, South Biddick, Lambton, Little Lumley, Great Lumley, Chester-le-Street, Waldrige, Plawsworth, Edmonsley, Pelton, Urpeth, and the parochial chapelry of Witton Gilbert; the latter embraces the townships of Ouston, Harraton, Birtley, Lamesley, Kibblesworth, Ravensworth, Hedley, Great and Little Usworth, Washington, and Barmston.

The Union Workhouse is now in course of erection on the south side of the town, where four acres of ground has been purchased for the purpose. The board of guardians meet every alternate Thursday. H. C. Bainbridge, Esq., chairman; James Gray, clerk; Ralph Linton, surgeon; Robert Leathard, master; Elizabeth Leathard, matron.

CHARITIES—This parish is one of those which is entitled to a share of the rents of the Longstock estate, bequeathed by Henry Smyth, Esq., for charitable purposes. This sum, which amounts to about £16 per annum, together with the yearly sum of £12 derived from Harrison's charity and other money, are divided amongst the different townships included in the ancient parish of Chester-le-Street, except those which form part of any distinct chapelry, and except the townships of Great Lumley and Little Lumley, the former being entitled to a distinct share of Henry Smyth's charity, and the latter receiving a considerable sum from the voluntary gift of Lord Scarborough. The share appropriated to each township varies in proportion to its population; and the amount, when determined, is paid to the overseer or to one of the principal inhabitants. Ralph Harrison, by his will, bearing date 26th March, 1687, left £100 to the poor of Chester-le-Street. It appears from the parish accounts, that the amount of this legacy, with a considerable accumulation of interest, was placed in the hands of General Lambton, ancestor of the present Lord Durham, whose agent pays £12 per annum in respect thereof. Elizabeth Tewart, by will, dated May 10th, 1718, bequeathed her house to the minister of the parish church of Chester-le-Street, he paying to the parish clerk 20s. yearly. She also left certain copyhold lands in the parish, called Nellsheets, out of which she directed that £6 should be paid yearly to a schoolmaster for instructing gratis twelve poor children; and that, out of the rents, twenty-four penny loaves should be distributed weekly amongst twelve poor widows and twelve other necessitous and indigent persons, and £3 yearly for placing out one boy, born and inhabiting in the town of Chester, apprentice to some trade or employment. This charity is distributed in accordance with the expressed intentions of the donor. Donor unknown.—By indentures dated December 20th and 21st, 1715, John Hedworth, Esq., for securing £100 he had then in his hands for the relief of the poor of the township of Chester-le-Street, and for other purposes therein specified, gave up certain tithes for raising a sum out of which £5 per annum should be paid to the poor; after which he directed that the minister of Chester church for the time being should receive and take all the residue of the rents and profits of the premises thereby conveyed, as an endowment and provision for the said minister and his successors.

White Hill Hall, the seat and property of John Cookson, Esq., is situated about a mile west of the town, and commands beautiful and extensive views of the surrounding country. The manor of White Hill was, in 1310, granted to Roger de Aula de Cestria by Bishop Beck, to hold of the see of Durham by 4s. annual rent, and service to the manor mill of Chester. It subsequently came into the possession of the Melote or Millot family, who were the proprietors till 1747, when it passed by will to the Wastells, from whom it was purchased by the family of the present possessor. White Hill House is the seat of Thomas Murray, Esq.

POST OFFICE, LAMBTON ARMS: Robert Lowson, postmaster. Letters arrive from the south at 7 30 a.m., and from the north at 7 30 p.m.; they are despatched to the north at 8 a.m., and to the south at 5 p.m.

EDMONSLEY township is principally the property of the Earl of Durham, John Cookson, Esq., J. Richardson, Esq., the trustees of the late Thomas Fenwick, Esq., and R. H. Gees, Esq. Its area is 1,964 acres, and its rateable value £2,730. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 429; in 1811, 223; in 1821, 205; in 1831, 150; in 1841, 253; and in 1851, 348.

Here is a colliery, worked by Samuel Tysack, Esq., of Sunderland. In 1362 William de Edmonsley died seised of this manor, which he held in chief of the Bishop of Durham, by homage, fealty, and a payment of ten shillings. It afterwards became the property of various persons, until, being forfeited by one of the Claxton family, who was attainted of high treason, it became, in 1573, the property of John Heath, Esq., of Keyper. It has been subsequently held by different proprietors, coming ultimately to those above mentioned. Broomyholme, Tribley, and Twizel, are estates in this township.

The Hamlet of Edmonsley is about six miles north-north-west of Durham.

LAMBTON township contains 652 acres, and is the property of the Earl of Durham. Its population in 1801 was 266; in 1811, 253; in 1821, 293; in 1831, 256; in 1841, 120; and in 1851, 115 souls. This township comprises the hamlet of Houghton-gate, a few scattered houses, and a considerable portion of the extensive park of Lambton Castle, where the family now resides, to whom it anciently gave name, and who, for many centuries, had their seat in this township, which is on the south side of the Wear, and, consequently, in the north division of Easington Ward, two miles east-north-east of Chester-le-Street.

Lambton Castle, the seat of the Earl of Durham, occupies an eminence on the north bank of the river Wear, in the township of Harraton, on the identical site of Harraton Hall, anciently the residence of the D'Arcys and Hedworths. This edifice, erected by Bonomi, is pleasantly situated in an extensive park, seven miles in circuit, and intersected by the Wear, over which is thrown a simple, yet elegant bridge of one arch. Though not entirely free from incongruities in the design and execution, the castle presents a magnificent appearance, and the improvements that have been recently effected add greatly to the beauty of the building and the surrounding park. The library, a quadrangular apartment of good proportions, contains a choice selection of literature, and several paintings of excellent character. The grounds are disposed in the most effective manner; and the ride, through a hanging wood, on the south bank of the river, is beautifully romantic. The regular pedigree of the ancient and honourable family of Lambton commences at the close of the twelfth century; but from the name occurring in the attestation of charters, their previous residence is well proved from a period very nearly approaching to the conquest. The Lambtons, with the exception of Lumley, Earl of Scarborough, are the only family in the county who still retain the seat whence they derive their name. The late earl, whose early death was universally lamented, filled the office of ambassador at the court of St. Petersburg, and was subsequently governor-general of Canada.

The name of Lambton is connected with a marvellous legend, which is thus related by Surtees:—"The heir of Lambton, fishing, as was his profane custom, in the Wear on a Sunday, hooked a small worm or eel, which he carelessly threw into a well, and thought no more of the adventure. The worm, at first neglected, grew till it was too large for its first habitation, and issuing forth from the Worm Well, betook itself to the Wear, where it usually lay part of the day coiled round a crag in the middle of the water; it also frequented a green mound near the well, the Worm Hill, where it lapped itself nine times round, leaving vermicular traces, of which grave living witnesses depose that they have seen the vestiges. It now became the terror of the country, and, amongst other enormities, levied a daily contribution of nine cows' milk, which was always placed for it at the green hill, and in default of which it devoured man and beast. Young Lambton had, it seems, meanwhile, totally repented him of his former life and conversation, had bathed himself in a bath of holy water, taken the cross, and joined the Crusaders. On his return home, he was extremely shocked at witnessing the effects of his youthful imprudences, and immediately undertook the adventure. After several fierce combats, in which the Crusader was foiled by his enemy's power of self union, he found it expedient to add policy to courage, and not perhaps possessing much of the former quality, he went to consult a witch or wise woman. By her judicious advice, he armed himself in a coat of mail, studded with razor blades, and, thus prepared, placed himself on the crag in the river, and awaited the monster's arrival. At the usual time, the worm came to the rock, and wound himself with great fury round the armed knight, who had the satisfaction to see his enemy cut in pieces by his own efforts, whilst the stream, washing away the several parts, prevented the possibility of re-union. There is still a sequel to the story: the witch had promised Lambton success only on one condition, that he should slay the first living thing which met his sight after the victory. To avoid the possibility of human slaughter, Lambton had directed his father that, as soon as he heard him sound three blasts on his bugle, in token of the achievement performed, he should release his favourite greyhound, which would immediately fly to the sound of the horn, and was destined to be the sacrifice. On hearing his son's bugle, however, the old chief was so overjoyed that he forgot the injunctions, and ran himself with open arms to meet his son. Instead of committing a parricide, the conqueror again repaired to his adviser, who pronounced, as the alternative of disobeying the original injunctions, that no chief of the Lambtons should die in his bed for seven, or, as some accounts say, for nine generations." The true meaning of this story has not been ascertained, though it probably arose from the circumstance of one of the early ancestors of the Lambtons rendering some service to the state, for which he had lands given to him at this place, as several similar traditions have originated from such causes.*

LUMLEY (GREAT) township comprises, with Lumley (Little), an area of 2,410 acres, and its rateable value is 3,291 11s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 696; in 1811, 693; in 1821, in consequence of the flourishing state of the collieries it had increased to 1,240; in 1831 to 2,301; in 1841, some of the collieries having ceased working the population had decreased to 1,706; and in 1851, to 1,730 souls. The principal landowners are the Earl of Scarborough and the Earl of Durham; the tithes belong to the latter nobleman and to Messrs. Trevelyan and Witham. Here is a colliery, worked by Messrs. Henry Stobbs and Partners. At an early period the vill of Great Lumley became the property of a younger branch of the Lumleys, from whom it passed by marriage to various families; it is now the property of the noblemen above mentioned.

The Village of Great Lumley is about 2 miles south-east of Chester-le-Street. Here is a national school, erected about four years ago, and in which divine service is performed on Sundays; Great and Little Lumley have been formed into a district parish, but they will not be finally separated from that of Chester-le-Street until a church is erected. Rev. John Dodd, M.A., is the officiating curate. The Wesleyans and New Connexion Methodists have each a place of worship here. There is also an hospital, which was founded in 1635, by Sir John Duck, Bart., of Durham, for the residence of twelve poor widows, each of whom receives a weekly allowance of two shillings.

Charity.—Besides the hospital, this township is entitled to a share of the rents of the Longstock estate, amounting to about £50 per annum, which is distributed annually at Christmas amongst the poor.

LUMLEY (LITTLE), the principal proprietor of which is the Earl of Scarborough, contains, with Great Lumley, 2,410 acres, and its rateable value is £1,504. Its population in 1801 was 249; in 1811, 259; in 1821, 351; in 1831, 303; in 1841, 381; and in 1851, 337 souls. The tithes are the property of the Earl of Durham and Messrs. Trevelyan and Witham. The township contains Lumley Castle and Park, a corn mill at Flotters, and Lumley Forge; the latter is now converted into a charcoal manufactory, a barley mill, &c., and is in the occupancy of Mrs. Elizabeth Ward.

Lumley Castle occupies a fine elevated situation on the southern bank of the river Wear, one mile east of Chester-le-Street, and forms a quadrangle, with a central area. At each corner are projecting turrets of an octangular form, which overhang the face of the square of the base, and are machicolated, for the purpose of annoying assailants. The east front is near the brow of a deep well-wooded valley, through which the Lumley-beck winds towards the Wear. The principal entrance to the castle is on its western side, by a double flight of steps, and a platform filling the whole space between the towers; the south front is of modern erection; that on the north is obscured by offices, but towards the east, the castle retains its ancient form, and, with its turrets and nicholated gateway has a most august appearance. The gateway is surmounted by six shields, with armorial bearings, deeply carved in stone, from which we learn that the castle underwent considerable alterations in 1389. The apartments have all mullioned windows, guarded with iron, and command a beautiful prospect of the neighbouring country. Many of the rooms are very spacious and are adorned with valuable paintings representing various members of the Lumley family. The illustrious house of Lumley has well-authenticated claims to the highest antiquity; and according to Camden, Dugdale, and others, is descended from Liulph, a nobleman of high rank in the time of Edward the Confessor, who married Alghitha, daughter of Aldred, Earl of Northumberland, by whom he had issue, Uchtred, Osbert, Adam, and Ado. From Uchtred descended Ralph de Lumley, of Lumley Castle, who was governor of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and was summoned to parliament as a baron by Richard II. One of his descendants, George Lord Lumley, was beheaded for high treason in the reign of Henry VIII.; but his son John was restored in blood as a baron by Edward VI., and was conspicuous during the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth. Dying without male issue, the ancient name of Lumley became extinct; but was, however, revived in the person of Richard Lumley, a collateral descendant, who came into the possession of the estate; and by letters patent, bearing date July 12th, 1628, was created Lord Viscount Lumley of Waterford, in Ireland. Richard Lumley, his grandson, was created an English peer, by the title of Baron Lumley, in 1681; and, having been instrumental in the elevation of the Prince of Orange to the English throne, was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Scarborough, in 1690. He was succeeded by his second son Richard in 1721, who dying without issue in 1739, the family honours devolved upon his brother Thomas Lumley Saunderson. Richard, the fourth Earl of Scarborough, succeeded his father in 1752, and, on his demise in 1782, his eldest son, George Augustus, inherited the family honours and estates; but dying unmarried in 1707, he was succeeded by his brother Richard, the sixth earl. The present possessor of the title and estates is John Lumley Saville, Earl of Scarborough, Viscount Lumley and Baron Lumley, of Lumley Castle, county of Durham, in the peerage of England; and Viscount Lumley, of Waterford, in that of Ireland. His Lordship is the son of John, seventh Earl who assumed the name of Saville.

PLAWSWORTH township is principally the property of the Earl of Durham, Miss Purvis, the executors of the late Robert D. Fenwick, Esq., Gilbert Wood, Esq., John Mowbray, Esq., John Thompson, Esq., Miss Askew, and Joseph

Thompson, Esq. Its area is 1,224 acres. The population in 1801 was 177; in 1811, 225; in 1821, 227; in 1831, 249; in 1841, 266; and in 1851, 264 souls. There is a colliery at Nettleworth in this township, which is carried on by Messrs. Jonasshon and Co. This estate anciently belonged to a family bearing the local name, but was afterwards held by the Kelawes, Forcers, Wylughbys, Boyntons, Hotons, Claxtons, Conyers, Daldons, Killingswicks, Brownfields and Boweses. Nettleworth manor formerly belonged to the Gategangs, Hagthorps, and Wessingtons; it is now held by the Askevs.

WALDRIDGE township comprises an area of 795 acres, and its rateable value is £1,967 2s. 1d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 83; in 1811, 77; in 1821, 125; in 1831, 104; in 1841, 432; and in 1851, 747. This township was long the estate of the Lumleys, and, in 1633, was left to the two daughters and coheiresses of Thomas Smith, Esq. In 1720, it was the property of George Black, Esq., and is now held by William Jolliffe, Esq., the heirs of the late Major Stephenson, George Morris, Esq., and S. Smith, Esq. Here is a colliery, in the occupancy of Thomas Sowerby and partners.

LAMESLEY PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north by the parishes of Whickham and Gateshead, on the west by Whickham and Tanfield, on the south by Chester-le-Street, and on the east by Gateshead and Washington. It comprises the townships of Hedley, Kibblesworth, Lamesley, and Ravensworth, whose united area is 7,016 acres, and rateable value £13,040. The principal land-owners are Lord Ravensworth, John Eden, Esq., John Bowes, Esq., Ralph Carr, Esq., Calverley Bewick, Esq., Thomas Bewick, Esq., William Errington, Esq., and Sir William Clavering. Coal of excellent quality is found in this township; and there are extensive brick works and coke ovens, which are carried on by Messrs. Bowes and Co.

HEDLEY township was anciently the property of the Mundevilles, under whom it was held by the Merleys, on condition of making suit at the court of Ravenshelm, and paying 13s. 4d. rent. It afterwards became a portion of the Gibside estates, and was possessed by the Blaxtons in the reign of James I. The rateable value of the township is £8,702. Its population is 1801 was 54; in 1811, it was returned with Lamesley; in 1821, it was 49; in 1831, 44; in 1841, 46; and in 1851, 42 souls.

The Hamlet of Hedley is about six miles south-south-west of Newcastle. The directory will be found at the end of the chapelry.

KIBBLESWORTH township was formerly held by a family bearing the local name, who alienated half the manor to the Scrutevills. It was subsequently divided amongst the Harbottles, Wilds, Hedworths, Lawsons, Bonners, Hargreaves, and Lewens. Its rateable value is £2,295. The number of inhabitants in 1801, was 202; in 1811, it was returned with Lamesley; in 1821, 237, in 1831, 246; in 1841, 219; and in 1851, 467.

The Village of Kibblesworth is five miles south-by-west of Newcastle.

LAMESLEY township is rich in coal and stone adapted for grindstones, and its rateable value is £8,702. The population in 1801 was 1,705; in 1811, that of the whole chapelry was 2,054; in 1821, that of Lamesley alone was 1,720; in 1831, 1,910; in 1841, 1,846; and in 1851, 1,914 souls.

The Village of Lamesley occupies a pleasant situation on the Team, to the south-west of Gateshead Fell, and about four miles south of Gateshead.

The Church or Chapel is a neat stone edifice, in the early English style, consisting of nave and aisles, chancel, and square tower. It underwent a thorough renovation about eight years ago, at which time the chancel was rebuilt and enlarged; the expense amounting to £1,600, was defrayed by Lord Ravensworth. The church possesses side galleries, and contains 700 sittings, those in the gallery being free. This chapelry formed the second prebend in the collegiate church of Chester, founded in 1286; but the chapel existed previous to that period. At the dissolution a slight provision was made for a perpetual curate. The living, which is not in charge nor certified, is returned at £90; gross income, £138. The register commences in 1603. Patron, Lord Ravensworth; incumbent, Rev. Robert Hopper Williamson, M.A.

Lamesley School is in the patronage of Lord Ravensworth, who subscribes £35 per annum towards its support. There is also £10 a-year from other sources, and for these two sums forty-five children are educated gratuitously. The school is under government inspection, and is well attended. There is also a girls' school, endowed with £20 per annum by the late Lady Ravensworth. Peter Elliott and Frances Fairbairn, teachers.

RAVENSWORTH township is supposed to derive its name from the Saxons. "In the oldest records concerning Ravensworth, the village is written Raffenswarth, and the castle Raffenshelm, the first signifying the estate, and the second the fortress of Raffen." Hutchinson supposes the name to allude to the Raffen, the standard of Denmark; but Surtees shows that the name Raven enters into the composition of numerous Saxon names of places, and that, in some instances, it may be derived from the haunts of the very bird itself. Bishop Flambard granted this and other manors to his nephew Richard, to be held by homage and knight's service. In 1357, mention occurs of the "Lady of Ravenswarth," and in 1368, she is styled "Countess of Ravenshelm." About 1370, the estate passed by marriage to the Lumley family, with whom it continued till their heiress married Sir Henry Boynton, whose only daughter married Sir Henry Gascoigne, of whose descendant, Sir William Gascoigne, the manors of Ravensworth, Lamesley, and Eighton, were purchased, in 1607, by Thomas Liddell, Esq., whose son, Thomas, was created a baronet on the 2nd of November, 1642, after having defended Newcastle against the Scots, and paid the sum of £4,000 to the sequestrators for his estates. The ancient pedigree of the Liddell family is very imperfect, and cannot be traced back much above 260 years, though it is recorded that the family were anciently lords of Liddell Castle, and Barony of Buft. From the time of their settling in this county, they have been considerable proprietors of coal works. Sir Thomas Henry Liddell, the seventh baronet, was raised to the peerage in 1821, by the title of Baron Ravensworth; and on his demise, in 1855, the title and estate devolved upon his son, the present Lord Ravensworth.

Ravensworth Castle, the seat of Lord Ravensworth, is situated westward of the river Team, on the site of the ancient castle, a fortress of very great antiquity, which was taken down in 1808, and the present structure erected. The works were placed under the superintendence of Mr. Nash, the architect; and an excellent white freestone, obtained from a quarry in the park, was used in the building of the edifice. The mansion is sheltered on the north and west sides by a fine wood of oaks. Towards the east, it commands an extensive view over Lamesley Vale; and immediately opposite, in the distance, is seen "the wild and shaken ridge of Gateshead Fell." This superb Gothic structure unites nearly all the warlike features of the ancient baronial residences, with the elegance and splendid refinement of modern times. "As we look upon it," says a recent writer, "the mind, without laborious effort, recurs to the olden time, when the Raven standard was here unfurled, and the walls rung with the rejoicings and laughter of the Danish chiefs. We pause; a thousand years have passed by—the invader is gone—a renovated, rather than a new edifice rises before us—and the barbarous manners and usages of the period we had contemplated, retire before the superior influence of a more refined and enlightened age." The mansion was considerably enlarged a few years ago, under the superintendence of the Hon. Thomas Liddell.

Ayton Banks (formerly written Eighton) is a village in this township, situated on a high and bleak fell,  $3\frac{1}{4}$  miles south-by-east of Newcastle. It is mentioned in the ancient records as an appendage to Ravensworth, and is included in the general conveyance of the Ravensworth estates from the Gascoignes to the Liddells. A small freehold, however, appears to have been held at an early period by a family bearing the local name. Here is a neat church, dedicated to St. Thomas, which was erected by subscription in 1833, at a cost of £1,100, on a site given by Thomas Davison, Esq., of Durham. It comprises nave and chancel, and contains sittings for 360 persons. It is attended by the incumbent of Lamesley.

Charities.—Ralph Harrison, the benefactor to the poor of Boldon, and other places, gave £50 to the poor of Lamesley. Ralph Surtees, on the 3rd September, 1733, also gave £10 for the use of the poor of the same place. These charities are in the hands of Lord Ravensworth, and the interest is applied as directed. "It appears," observes the Charity Commissioners, "from a paper produced to us, referring to a deed, bearing date 15th March, 1733, that John Smith, upon a settlement of his estates, thereby reserved to himself a power of charging the same with the payment of £520; and that by his will, bearing date 25th March, 1734, he devised £500, part of the said sum of £520, to his daughter, and gave £20, the residue thereof, to Lamesley chapelry, the interest to be distributed yearly, on Christmas day, amongst poor people living within the said chapelry, and not named in the town book at the discretion of the minister and churchwardens. In respect of this benefaction, the yearly sum of 20s. is paid by Lord Ravensworth, who is stated to have become possessed of the estate formerly belonging to the donor. This sum is divided by the incumbent on Christmas day, equally amongst eight poor persons of the chapelry not receiving parochial relief."

PELTON DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish, which comprises the townships of Ouston, Pelton, and Urpeth, with parts of Chester and Edmonsley townships, was formed from the parish of Chester-le-Street by an order in council, dated April 8rd, 1848, and created a separate and distinct parish.

Ouston township, principally the property of Lady Noel Byron, contains 636 acres, and its rateable value is £1,613 6s. 8d. Its population in 1601 was 48; in 1811, 150; in 1821, 304; in 1831, 273; in 1841, 282; and in 1851, 300 souls. In 1284, Bishop Farham gave Ouston to St. Edmund's Hospital, in Gateshead. After the suppression of the monastic institutions, this township became the property of the Andersons, and subsequently of the Hedworths, from whom it passed to their coheirs, Jolliffe and Milbank, coming ultimately to the present proprietor.

The Hamlet of Ouston is about three miles north-west of Chester-le-Street and contains a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel.

PELTON township comprises an area of 1,109 acres, and its rateable value is £4,483 13s. 5d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 539; in 1811, 672; in 1821, 522; in 1831, 550; in 1841, 1,030, and in 1851, 1,207. The landowners are the Earl of Durham, Messrs. Fenwick and Story, Mrs. Bewick, and William Jolliffe, Esq. In 1320, Hugh Burden held land in Pelton of John de Haddam, the superior lord. It afterwards passed to the Redheughs, and then to Robert de Whelpington, who conveyed Pelton to the Neville family, and it was forfeited with their possessions.

The Village of Pelton occupies an elevated situation, about two miles north-west of Chester-le-Street, and has much improved of late years.

The Church is a handsome structure, in the Gothic style, erected in 1842, at a cost of £1,466 9s. 7d., of which sum her majesty's commissioners gave £300, the Incorporated Society for the Building, &c., of Churches, £200, the Bishop of Durham £100, Mrs. Bewick, £100, Henry King Scott £100, the owners of Pelton Colliery £200, the owners of Urpeth Colliery £100, the remainder being derived from subscriptions. It comprises nave, aisles, chancel, and lofty spire, and contains 450 sittings, 267 of which are free and unappropriated. There are several stained glass windows in the church, which add much to the general impressiveness of the structure. The living is in the gift of the curate of Chester-le-Street, and incumbency of the Rev. Henry Barrett, M.A.

The Parsonage is a commodious edifice, recently erected at an expense of £1,083.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here.

The National School, erected in 1851, will accommodate 150 children. There is also a girls' school for about the same number of pupils. These schools are chiefly supported by subscription.

URPETH township is principally the property of Mrs. Bewick, John Eden, Esq., and Calverley Bewick, Esq. Its area is 1,671 acres. The population in 1801 was 524; in 1811, inclusive of Ouston township, 1,269; in 1821, Urpeth alone, 650; in 1831, 716; in 1841, 907; and in 1851, 952 souls. There are collieries worked by Messrs. Perkins and Partners, and extensive iron works, carried on by Messrs. Hawks, Crawshaw, and Co., besides a paper mill in the occupancy of Mr. William Elliott, a corn mill, saw mill, &c. In the olden Book it appears that Urpeth was held on drengage tenure, wherein, amongst other duties, the tenants were obliged to find fifteen cords, two greyhounds, and feed horse and dog for the great chase, &c. The first person recorded as possessing this manor is Thomas de Urpeth, who held the same of the bishop in capite. At the time of Bishop Hatfield's Survey, it appears that Sir Thomas Grey, of Heton, then held the manor. It was part of the forfeiture on the attainder of Sir Thomas Grey, Knt. of Northumberland, who was attainted and executed at Southampton in 1415; but it was restored by Bishop Neville to Sir Ralph Grey, in 1454. It soon afterwards became the property of the Hedworths, who alienated it to the Lambtons; and, in 1640, the manor became the property of Robert Bewick, Esq. The lordship of Pockerley, in this township, was anciently the estate of the Moubouchers, who rendered for it annually a clove gilly flower to the lord of Urpeth. Urpeth Moor, comprising 136 acres, was divided by agreement in 1796.

The Village of Urpeth is situated south of the Team, about three miles north-west of Chester-le-Street. Urpeth Lodge, the residence of Mrs. Bewick, occupies an agreeable situation, commanding beautiful prospects of the neighbouring country. Foulbridge House and Spark House are also handsome residences.

Pit Hill is a hamlet in this township, where the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have each a place of worship.

TANFIELD PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north-east and north by the parishes of Whickham and Ryton; on the west by the parish of Lanchester and the chapelry of Medomsley, on the south by the parishes of Chester and Lanchester, on the south-east by Chester, and on the east by the chapelry of Lamesley. It embraces the townships of Beamish and Lintz Green, including the villages and hamlets of Tanfield, Shield Row, Tantoby, White-lee-Head, Burnop Field, Lintz Ford, and Hill Head, and comprises extensive collieries, coke ovens, and fire-brick manufactories. The area of the chapelry is 7,072 acres, and its rateable value £13,169. The population in 1801 was 2,228; in 1811, 1,810; in 1821, 2,357; in 1831, 2,498; in 1841, 2,611; and in 1851, 3,480 souls. The principal landowners are John Eden, Esq., Sir William Clavering, Bart., Charles Townley, Esq., Lord Ravensworth, Messrs. Bowes and Fenwick, H. W. Watson, Esq., Messrs. Bowes and Simpson, the Marquis of Dufferin, Mrs. Ellison, Colonel Swinburne, The Misses Fenwick, John Hodgson Hinde, Esq., William Addison, Esq., Messrs. Brookbank and Allgood, Messrs. R. J. and R. Laycock, R. S. Surtees, Esq., and some small proprietors. The North-Eastern Railway passes through the chapelry, and has a goods station at Tantoby.

BEAMISH is a township without a village of its own name, about seven-and-a-half miles south-south-west of Newcastle. Its acreage, population, &c. are returned with those of the chapelry. It contains abundance of excellent soil, which is transmitted by railway to South Shields and Sunderland for shipment. Guiscard de Charron, lord of Beamish, in 1268, left a son, whose only daughter, Joan, married Bertram Monboucher, Knt., of Northumberland. Five Bertram Monbouchers successively held the manors of Beamish and Tanfield; when the inheritance, by maternal descent, devolved on Bertram Harbottle, whose grandson left two daughters and coheiresses, one of whom became the wife of Thomas Percy, who was executed at Tyburn for rebellion in 1537. Her son, Thomas, Earl of Northumberland, was beheaded at York in 1572, when Beamish and Tanfield were forfeited to the crown. They were afterwards held by several proprietors, and are now the property of the proprietors above mentioned.

Beamish Hall, the seat of John Eden, Esq., is a noble stone mansion, situated in a beautiful park, about two miles east-by-south of Tanfield. The vale here expands itself "into a fine level flat or strath, bordered on every side by rising grounds of irregular form, richly clothed with luxuriant forest trees."

Tanfield Village, which gives name to the chapelry, is situated in the township of Beamish, eight miles south-west of Newcastle. Two fairs, for the hiring of servants, are held here annually, on the first Wednesday in May, and the second Wednesday in September. A floral and horticultural show also takes place once a year. The manor of Tanfield was formerly held by the lords of Beamish; and on the forfeiture of the Earl of Northumberland, in 1569, it was granted by the crown to Henry Jackman, who alienated the estate in parcels.

The Chapel, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a neat structure, entirely rebuilt in 1749, with the exception of some portion of the chancel. A handsome square embattled tower, with clock, was added in 1853, at the expense of John Eden, Esq., of Beamish Hall; and the structure now consists of nave, aisles, chancel, and tower. There are sittings for 700 persons. The parish register commences in 1577. The living is a perpetual curacy, not in charge or certificated, returned at £85; gross income, £150. The tithes are commuted for £155 2s. 6d. Patron, Lord Ravensworth; incumbent, Rev. William Simpson; curate, Rev. John Matwin.

Tanfield Grammar School.—Robert Robinson, by will, dated 1730, left a rent-charge of £8 payable out of a close called Hough-hill-Bridge Close, towards the maintaining of a school-master at Tanfield; and Elizabeth Davis, by will, dated March 31st, 1762, bequeathed £500, to be placed out, and the interest applied towards the supporting a school or schools within the chapelry of Tanfield for the instruction of poor children. The sum of £500 was placed out, and produced £25 per annum, which, together with the £8 above-mentioned, was paid to the master of the Grammar School, who, in consideration thereof, instructed eighteen boys of the chapelry. The property being in chancery, these endowments were disallowed by the master in 1850. In addition to the elementary branches, the course of instruction pursued in his school embraces the Latin, Greek, and French languages, drawing, geography, the use of the globes, mathematics, music, &c. James Anthony Inaith, master.

The National School, which is under the patronage of the incumbent, will accommodate about 120 children.

Charities.—William Davison, by will, dated 31st January, 1732, left £2 per annum to poor widows in the township of Beamish. Ralph Harrison, in 1687, amongst other legacies to the parish of Boldon and other places, left £100 to the use of the poor of the chapelry of Tanfield. Robert Robinson bequeathed £50, and Elizabeth Davison £100 to the poor of the same chapelry. These several legacies bear interest at four-and-a-half per cent, which is annually distributed by the minister and chapelwardens, in accordance with the intentions of the donors. It is stated in the parliamentary returns of 1786, that John Wetheret, by will, in 1748, gave £25 to ten poor families, producing £1 2s. 6d. per annum. This legacy, with the further sum of £25 left by the same person for the use of the minister, is placed out at interest at four-and-a-half per cent, one moiety of which is received by the minister for his own use, and the other by the minister and chapelwardens for distribution amongst the poor. It is also stated in the parliamentary returns, that John Hornsby left £20 to the poor. This legacy, with the further sum of £20 left by the same person for the minister, is out at interest at five per cent, and is divided and disposed of in the same manner as the preceding charity.

Tantoby is a hamlet in the Beamish township, nine miles south-west of Newcastle. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, and a goods-station on the North Eastern Railway.

LINTZ GREEN township lies on the western verge of Tanfield chapelry, and extends from seven to nine miles south-west of Newcastle. It was anciently held by a family bearing the local name, from whom it passed to the Redneughs, and from them to the Hedleys, coming subsequently to the Hodgsons. The population, acreage, &c., are returned with the chapelry. At Lintz Ford is a paper-mill, worked by Messrs. John Annandale and Sons. Loft House was formerly the property of the Nicholl family. High Friarside belonged to Roger Thornton in 1451, from whom it descended to the Lumleys. Low Friarside is situated on the Derwent, to the west of Gibside, where there anciently stood a small chapel. The estate was formerly held by the Tempests, from whom it passed to the Blakistons of Gibside, and it still forms a portion of the Strathmore possessions.

CHESTER WARD.—WEST DIVISION.

The west division of Chester Ward comprises the parishes and chapelries of Benfieldside, Collierley, Ebchester, Edmundbyers, Hunstonworth, Lanchester, Medomsley, Muggleswick, Ryton, Satley, Stella, Whickham, and Winlaton.

BENFIELDSIDE DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish, which was formed from the extensive parish of Lanchester by an order in council, dated September 3rd, 1847, comprises the township of Benfieldside, with a portion of that of Conside and Knitsley, and its population in 1801 was 5,475 souls.

BENFIELDSIDE township is principally the property of Jonathan Richardson, Esq., John Beckenton, Esq., and the Messrs. Annandale. Its area is 1,834 acres, and its rateable value £4,622 10s. The population in 1801 was returned with Medomsley township; in 1811, it was 275; in 1821, 341; in 1831, 534; in 1841, 1,074; and in 1851, 2,475 souls. At the time of Hatfield's Survey this township was held by many tenants; and from time immemorial, the bishops of Durham have appointed foresters or keepers of their woods of Benfieldside. This township contains no village of its own name, but includes those of Shotley Bridge and Black Hill.

Shotley Bridge is a village in Benfieldside township, pleasantly situated on the south bank of the Derwent, 12 miles west-south-west of Newcastle. "The surrounding scenery is wild and romantic; and the Derwent fringed with native wood, wanders through rich haugh grounds, finely contrasted with the heathy hills, which hem in the vale on the north and south." On the south and east of Shotley there are many handsome mansions, which add much to the beauty of the surrounding scenery. Here are large paper mills, in the occupation of the Messrs. Annandale. In the neighbouring vale are two spa wells and bath houses, which are much visited. According to an analysis made by Mr. William West, practical chemist, Leeds, an imperial gallon of the water contained chloride of sodium, 177 grains; chloride of calcium, 86 grains; chloride of magnesium, 3 grains; carbonate of iron, 4 grains; carbonate of soda, 5½ grains; silica, 13½ grains; bromine, less than a grain; iodine, a trace; potash, a trace; carbonic acid gas, 10 cubic inches; carburetted hydrogen, 2 cubic inches; nitrogen, 13 cubic inches. The taste of the water is agreeable, though saline; it has no smell; when standing, becomes turbid, and leaves a deposit of ochre; when boiled minute crystals form on surface; the residuum effervesces briskly with acids. The following is the analysis of the new well, by W. Reed Clanny, M.D., chloride of sodium, 513½ grains; chloride of calcium, 91½ grains; chloride of magnesium, 2 grains; carbonate of soda, 23½ grains; carbonate of iron, 9½ grains; silica, 3½ grains; potash, iodine, and bromine, of each a trace; carbonic acid gas, 13 cubic inches; nitrogen, 9½ cubic inches; carburetted hydrogen, 3½ cubic inches. The waters of these wells are much recommended for their medicinal qualities. Two fairs are held annually in the village, on the Monday before May 13th and November 11th; hirings for servants also take place twice a year. A floral and horticultural show, which is numerous attended, is held here in September, and in the following month an agricultural show. Petty sessions are held once a fortnight in the police office, Shotley Grove, before R. S. Surtees, Esq., and Peter Annandale, Esq. Robert M. Allen, clerk. The County Court for the recovery of debts under £50, is held monthly in the same place. Henry Stapylton, Esq., judge; Mr. Martin Bell, clerk.

The Church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, occupies a commanding situation, south of the village, and when viewed from the north is acknowledged to be one of the most imposing structures in the county. It was erected by subscription in 1851, at a cost of £2,696 7s. 4d., and comprises nave, aisles, chancel, and handsome tower, surmounted by an octagonal spire, 190 feet high. The site for the church and burial ground was given by Thomas Wilson Esq., of Shotley Hall, who also contributed upwards of £450 towards the building. The church is spacious and lofty, with open roof, and contains 412 sittings, 275 of which are free and unappropriated. The living, valued at £150, is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the crown and the Bishop of Durham, who present alternately. Rev. T. B. Thompson, incumbent.

The Parsonage is situated near the church, and was erected about the same time, at an expense of £1,800, part of which was defrayed by a grant from the Church Building Society.

St. Cuthbert's (Catholic) Church, now nearly completed, is situated at Black Hill, and is in the early English style. It will contain sittings for 900 persons.

The Friends' Meeting House, a plain commodious building, situated at Snow's Green, is the property of Jonathan Richardson, Esq., and is well attended.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, now in course of erection, south of the village of Shotley Bridge, is in the early English style, and will accommodate about 500 persons. There will be a school-room beneath the chapel and the estimated cost is £1,300. The Wesleyans have another place of worship at Black Hill, erected in 1817. Rev. Thomas Pearson, minister.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel is a plain, substantial building, with a school-room beneath, erected in 1852, at a cost of £400. It possesses 300 ittings. There is another chapel belonging to this body at Black Hill. Rev. Moses Lupton, superintendent minister.

The Baptist Chapel is a neat and commodious structure, with minister's house attached, erected in 1851, upon a site given by Mr. Annandale, at an expense of £700, and will accommodate 200 persons. There is a school in connection with the chapel. Rev. George Whitehead, minister.

The Mechanics' Institution and Reading Room was established in 1840, under the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, and its library now contains upwards of 700 volumes, while the reading room is well supplied with the reading papers of the day. It is supported by about ninety subscribers. The lecture-hall is large, and will accommodate about 400 persons. George Forster, Esq., president; Joseph Brodie and James Oley, secretaries; Isaac Dixon, treasurer.

Shotley Park, the seat and property of Jonathan Richardson, Esq., is delightfully situated on a gentle eminence, south of the Derwent, and commands a beautiful prospect of the surrounding country.

Black Hill is a village in this township, where there are chapels belonging to the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. Snow's Green, a hamlet in Benfieldside township, stands on elevated ground, a mile to the south-east of Shotley Bridge; where are the residences of Thomas Richardson, Esq., and Jonathan B. Richardson, Esq.

COLLIERLY DISTRICT PARISH,

Collierly district parish was formed from Lanchester parish by an order in council, September 24th, 1842, and comprises the townships of Billingside, Collierly, and a portion of that of Kyo.

BILLINGSIDE township contains 288 acres, which is divided into two farms, the property of General Hunter and Messrs. Brooksbank and Allgood; and its rateable value is £141. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, lands were held here by the Lords and Gowhills. The population in 1801 was 54; in 1811 it was returned with Collierly township; in 1821, it was 45; in 1831, 18; in 1841, 13; and in 1851, 16 souls. Billingside is thirteen miles north-west of Durham; and Anthony Blanch, farmer, East Billingside, is the principal resident.

COLLIERLY township, which includes the villages of Colliery Dykes, Dipton, and Pontop, comprises an area of 1,055 acres, and its rateable value is £2,245. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 539; in 1811, inclusive of Billingside, 549; in 1821, 556; in 1831, 526; in 1841, 853; and in 1851, 576. Since the latter period, the township has increased rapidly in population, in consequence of the opening of new coal mines, some of which have been commenced during the present year (1855). The number of inhabitants is now about 3,000. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, Collierly was possessed by the Gilford family, who continued its proprietors until the failure of male issue, when it passed by marriage to the Robsons. In 1474, Robert Rhodes died seized of the manor of Collierly, and of land called Greenlaw. Queen Elizabeth, in 1571, granted lands here to Sir George Bowes. The present proprietors are the heirs of the late Marquis of Bute, T. R. Swinburne, Esq., Mr. Keenleyside, Mrs. Ellison, John Warwick, Esq. and others.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St. Thomas, is situated in Kyo township, and is a neat edifice, in the early English style, erected by subscription in 1810, at a cost of about £700, on a site given by Ralph Waters, Esq. The church contains 270 sittings, the whole of which are free and unappropriated. Incumbent, the Rev. Blythe Hunt, who resides at Dipton, as there is no parsonage house attached to the church.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have also places of worship in his township.

Collierly National School, erected in 1846, is a handsome building, in the Elizabethan style, and will accommodate eighty children. It is partly supported by an annual contribution of £21 from the neighbouring coal owners. Thomas Teasdale, teacher.

Colliery Dykes, Dipton, and Pontop, are villages in this township, which owe their existence to the neighbouring coal-mines.

Kyo township is situated to the north of Lanchester, and contains extensive collieries, coke ovens, brick manufactories, &c., in which many of the inhabitants are employed. It comprises an area of 1,280 acres. The population in 1801 was 281; in 1811, 385; in 1821, 448; in 1831, 412; in 1841, 965; and in 1851, 1,401 souls. Walter de Monasteriis gave this estate, subject to a reserved rent, to Simon, archdeacon of Durham, who granted the vill to the almoner of St. Cuthbert. On the archdeacon's death, the estate was given by Henry de Ferlington to the Hospital of the Holy Trinity in Gateshead, which paid 40s., half of the fee-farm rent, to the almoner of Durham. In 1631, Isabel de Birtley held lands of the house of St. Edmund, to which Trinity Hospital had been previously annexed, by the service of a rose on the festival of the nativity of St. John the Baptist. At a subsequent date the Marleys held lands here. The present proprietors are Earl Swinburne, Lord Ravensworth, R. Waters, Esq., Colonel Swinburne, and others; the Bishop of Durham is lord of the manor.

Anfield Plane is a populous village in this township, and contains places of worship belonging to the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists.

Biography.—John Buddle, the eminent colliery viewer and mining engineer, was a native of Kyo, and, at an early age, evinced an attachment for active occupation, and an eager pursuit of experimental knowledge. He soon became the assistant of his father, as a colliery viewer; and, on the demise of the elder Mr. Buddle in 1806, he was immediately placed by Mr. Russell at the head of his immense colliery concerns, and continued ever afterwards to enjoy the confidence of that gentleman and his successors. In 1810, he introduced at Wallsend those great improvements in ventilation which have been so much imitated. He was also engaged as viewer and consulting engineer of several of the principal collieries in the north, and was extensively employed on railways and general engineering. As Mr. Buddle advanced in life, he became a proprietor of coal mines, as well as of lands, shipping, and other property, from which he derived a considerable income. He assisted the Marquis of Londonderry in the formation and completion of Seaham Harbour, and was present at its opening, when the first coals were shipped in a vessel of his own. "To all interested in the history of coal-mining," says a recent writer, "the name of Mr. Buddle is familiar. He was active, steady, and unremitting in the discharge of duties which were attended at all times with much personal fatigue, and frequently with imminent danger. In private life he was distinguished by many excellent qualities and social virtues. His house, for nearly half a century, was the resort of most of the scientific strangers who visited the north of England.

and his death was regarded as a public loss. He died at his residence, Wallsend, on the 10th October, 1848, in the 70th year of his age."

EBCHESTER CHAPELRY.

Ebchester chapelry is separated by the river Derwent from Northumberland, and on every other side is bounded by the chapelry of Medomsley. Its area is 550 acres, and its rateable value £1,014 15s. It contained, in 1801, 168 inhabitants; in 1811, 210; in 1821, 200; in 1831, 255; in 1841, 331; and in 1851, 610. The principal landowners are John Dixon, Esq., Jonathan W. Jewitt, Esq., John Hunter, Esq., Matthew R. Bigge, Esq., Andrew Bolton, Esq., and John Cochrane, Esq. This township embraces a portion of Berry Edge; and contains a colliery, which is worked by Mr. William Coupland.

The Village of Ebchester is about ten miles west-south-west of Newcastle; and "though it stands at the foot of a long descent, sloping towards the north, yet it is scattered along the edge of a still deeper declivity, which overhangs the green haughs of the Derwent." This village, situated on the line of the Watling-street, is, as its name denotes, a Roman station; the vallum, at the edge of the steep, is still distinct. "The north-west angle," observes Surtees, "is perfect, and part of the western aggar, though cut through by road and foot-paths. On the south, also, the vallum is extremely distinguishable, just within the southern wall of the churchyard, part of which at least seems built out of the ruins of the Roman ramparts; and the moss-grown crumbling walls of some neighbouring cottages on the west betray a similar origin. The great road which led to this station from the south, and which Warburton saw brail and distinct before the inclosures, may be still partially traced. Many scattered remains of sepulchral and other monuments may be still observed built up in several of the houses of Ebchester." Several altars, inscriptions, and other remains of antiquity have been found here from time to time, some of which are in the Cathedral Library at Durham. This station is generally supposed to be the Vindomora, of the Itinerary, and to have been partly constructed by the Legio Sexta Victrix. The history of Ebchester, subsequent to the Roman period, is both brief and obscure. St. Ebba, daughter of Ethelfrid, King of Northumbria, is said to have founded a monastery on the banks of the Derwent, about the year 660. Tradition informs us that this convent was destroyed by the Danes, and no vestige of it now remains. "Five centuries later, Ebchester lay desolate; only a solitary hermit had found a retreat amongst the mouldering ruins of the ancient Vindomora, attracted perhaps by the sanctity of St. Ebba, and the retirement of the situation on the borders of the forests." On the foundation of Sherburn Hospital, Bishop Pudsey granted to it "Ebchester, the place of anchores on the Derwent (which river divided our forest from that of our neighbours), for the pasture of animals for the use of the sick brethren, and for the maintenance of their shepherds in the same place;" he added, "licence to till one caracute of eight score acres of the bishop's land newly disforested;" and to Sherburn Hospital the advowson of the church of Ebchester, and a considerable portion of land still belong. Long after the ruin of Vindomora, the Wutling street afforded a ready passage both to Danes and Saxons. We are informed by Hutchinson, that David, the Scottish king, passed over Ebchester Bridge in 1340; and King Edward seems to have made use of the same route when in pursuit of the Scots. According to Rushworth, the Covenanters, under Leslie, followed the same track.

The Church is an ancient structure, dedicated to St. Ebba, and stands within the south-western angle of the Roman station. It consists of a low nave and chancel, with a south porch, and contains a few mural monuments. The churchyard contains memorials of several members of the Surtees family. The living is a perpetual curacy, not in charge, of the certified value of £16 7s. 5d.; gross income, £86. The parish register commences in 1619. Patrons, the master and brethren of Sherburn Hospital; incumbent, Rev. George Stubbs.

Here are chapels belonging to the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists.

EDMUNDBYERS PARISH.

This parish, which possesses no dependant townships, is bounded on the north by the Derwent, on the west by Hunstonworth, and on the south and east by Muggleswick. Its area is 4,890 acres, and its rateable value £1,499 15s. The population in 1801 was 215; in 1811, 313; in 1821, 358; in 1831, in consequence of the increase of mining operations, it was 484; in 1841, 458; and in 1851, 485 souls. At the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, it appears that Alan Bruntop held the manor of Edmundbyers by forest service; but it was afterwards possessed by the Prior of Durham, and is now the property of the dean and chapter. The estates, called Roughside and Pedomsook, occupy the western side of this parish.

The Village of Edmundbyers is situated south of the river Derwent, nineteen miles west-south-west of Newcastle, and eleven south-south-east of Hexham, and consists of a few cottages, scattered around a small green on the descent of a hill, washed by the Birdenhope Beck.

The Church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a small plain stone building, consisting of nave and chancel, the latter supported by short buttresses. The interior of the edifice is at present much out of repair. The parish register commences in 1730. The living is a rectory, valued in the Liber Regis at £6 11s. 4d.; gross income, £220. There is about fifteen acres of glebe and. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham; rector, the Rev. Joseph Forster, for whom the Rev. R. G. Willis officiates as curate.

The Rectory House is situated near the church, and is occupied by the curate.

The Parish School was erected in 1825, at the expense of the dean and chapter of Durham and Lord Crewe's trustees, the former of whom also contribute £10 per annum towards its support.

Here is a  Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, erected in 1835, at an expense of £90, upon ground given by Mr. Thomas Ward, of Edmondbyers; it is attended generally by local preachers. The Primitive Methodists meet for worship at the house of Mr. George Raine.

Charities.—Ann Baxter, of West Roughside, widow, by will, dated 7th January, 1743, bequeathed, for the use of the poor of Edmondbyers, £15, the interest of which she directed to be distributed yearly on Christmas-day.

POST OFFICE, EDMUNDBYERS: Ann Murray, postmistress.—Letters arrive and are despatched daily, Sundays excepted, at 4 p.m.

HUNSTONWORTH PARISH.

The parish of Hunstonworth is bounded on the north by the Derwent, on the north-west by the imaginary line which divides Durham and Northumberland, on the south-west and south by Stanhope parish, and on the east by Edmondbyers. It comprises no dependant townships. The area of the parish is 10,380 acres, and its rateable value £1,066 15s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 215; in 1811, 386; in 1821, 411; in 1831, 511; in 1841, 567; and in 1851, 615. The landowners are the trustees of Lord Crewe, and the Rev. Daniel Capper, the latter of whom, in conjunction with Thomas Scottwo, Esq., exercises the manorial rights and privileges. In ancient times, this manor was held by Robert Corbet, who settled it upon Kepier Hospital; but on the suppression of the monastic institutions, it appears to have been granted to William, Lord Paget, who, like many others of the nobility of the period, contrived to obtain a considerable portion of the property belonging to the church and the poor. From the Paget family, the estate passed to the Eglistons, with whom it remained till it was alienated, with the exception of a small portion, about the year 1689, to John Ord, Esq., of Newcastle, from whom it has descended to the present proprietors. The parish is tithe free, with the exception of a modus, paid by Lord Crewe's trustees to the Rev. Daniel Capper.

The Village of Hunstonworth is twelve miles south of Hexham, and twenty-five west by south of Newcastle, at the western extremity of Chester Ward.

The Church, dedicated to St. James, is a small unpretending structure, rebuilt about the year 1781. The parish register commences in 1724. The living is a perpetual curacy, not in charge, pays no first fruits nor tenths, and is in the patronage of the Rev. Daniel Capper, rector of Huntley, Gloucestershire. The present incumbent, the Rev. Samuel Payne, who has officiated here for the last twenty years, is about to retire through old age.

In 1850, a room, in the neighbourhood of the lead mines, was fitted up and opened for religious worship, at the expense of the lead company, and is used by the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists on alternate Sundays; the former body also hold a Sunday school in the building.

The Parish School is partly supported by the Rev. Daniel Capper and Lord Crewe's trustees, each of whom contribute £5 per annum. A library is kept in the vestry of the church for the use of the parishioners. Robert Close and Mrs. Close, teachers.

The Derwent Lead Mines.—These mines were formerly worked by a London company, but had lain waste for a number of years, when, in 1805, their working was recommenced by a company, called the Arkendale and Derwent Company, under the management of one of the shareholders, Frederick Hall, Esq., acting director, and John Robinson, Esq., under-ground agent. The first year of the new company's operations, a steam engine was laid down at Beldon Shields; afterwards another at Ramshaw; next a water wheel, which is still in use, fifty feet in diameter, worked with horizontal rods nearly a mile long. A few years later, an hydraulic engine was made and fitted up at Whiteheaps Mine, which was, by this means, drained to the depth of the great limestone. After this, other machinery being brought into use, a considerable quantity of lead ore was obtained, to the amount of 10,000 bings in one year. In the course of the workings at the Jeffery's Mine, a wonderful discovery was made, which deserves to be recorded, from the fact of its being, perhaps, unique of its kind. About 300 feet from the surface, in driving a waggate drift in the vein, the miners came to a number of trees, seven in all, the largest of which was about six feet in circumference; their branches and eaves were bedded in the high waggate drift, and were of necessity cut out to prosecute the further working of the mine. A part of one of the trees is still standing in the mine, guarded with rails, to preserve it as a memento of the discovery. This account is taken verbatim from John Robinson, Esq., a resident of the parish, who was mining agent here for about forty-six years, a situation which he has very recently resigned.* The old company and part of a new one are now working these mines with great spirit, and it is expected that at the second winning, which is to bottom the great limestone, the mines will, in a few years, be very productive, and will amply remunerate the shareholders for their present outlay.

* Mr. Robinson relates another and a much more curious discovery than the above, which took place when he was check agent at the Danby Mine, Arkendale, near Richmond, Yorkshire. Being one day in the Danby Mine, in the lower limestone, beneath the great limestone, he broke into a small cavity in the cheek of the vein, and, to his great astonishment, discovered a petrified silver pencil cock, the size of life, and so perfect in its appearance, that after it was brought to the surface and placed on the office table, it was mistaken at first sight by the managing director, Frederick Hall, Esq., for a real bird. [If this curiosity is still in existence, a line from its possessor to Mr. Robinson, stating the fact, would be esteemed a favour.]

LANCHESTER PARISH.

Lanchester parish comprises the townships of Burnop and Hamsteels, Helyfield, Homeside, Greencroft, Iveston, Kyo, Lanchester, and Langley. It formerly embraced fifteen townships and four chapelries; but some of the former have been formed into district parishes, and the latter are now nearly independent of the mother church. The ancient parish was bounded on the north by Ryton, and the chapelry of Tanfield; on the north-west and west by Stanhope and Muggleswick; on the south-west and south by Brancepeth and Wolsingham; on the south-east by Wilton Gilbert and St. Oswald; and on the east by Chester-le-Street.

BURNOP AND HAMSTEELS form a joint township, containing 2,027 acres, and the rateable value is £1,024. The population in 1801 was 68; in 1811, 115; in 1821, 127; in 1831, 133; in 1841, 154; and in 1851, 139 souls. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, this township was held by a number of tenants, some of whom were free. The present landowners are the Earl of Durham, Thomas Cookson, Esq., Matthew Kearney, Esq., the heirs of the late Mr. Selby, Mrs. Hedley, John Fawcett, Esq., E. T. Smith, Esq., and others. Burnop lies on the Browney, six miles west-by-north of Durham, and is supposed to derive its name from the ridge that rises from the hollow of the Brune or Browney. Hamsteels stands farther to the west, and only a short distance from Esh. Burnopside Hall is the seat of the Hon. George Liddell. Biggin is a hamlet in this township, beautifully situated in the neighbourhood of Esh, to which chapelry it belongs for ecclesiastical purposes.

GREENCROFT township, which adjoins Lanchester on the north-west, comprises an area of 3,050 acres, and its rateable value is £2,749. It contained 1801, 184 inhabitants; in 1811, 205; in 1821, 229; in 1831, 235; in 1841, 392; and in 1851, 720. When Boldon Book was compiled, Greencroft paid sixteen shillings, carried the lord's wine with a wain of four oxen, and the tenants maintained the twelfth part of Lanchester Mill Pool: the emesne lands were exonerated from this service, but performed the whole carriage of wine. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, Robert de Kellow and John Rugheved held the vill of Greencroft under several services, and attending the bishop's chase with two greyhounds. Other parcels of land were held by exchequer-rent. Kellow's moiety passed to the Claxtons, and was forfeited by Robert Claxton, who took part in the Northern Rebellion in 1569. The Rugheveds held their moiety till 1423, when we find it in the possession (in trust) of Sir Ralph Eure. Thomas Forster conveyed his moiety to the family of Stanley, who held the estate for two centuries, and seem to have reunited it. The principal landowners at present are Sir William Clavering, Bart., Jonathan Richardson, Esq., Robert Balleny, Esq., Messrs. Brooksbank and Allgood, and Henry Shadforth, Esq. This township abounds in coal and freestone. Burnop Colliery, in this township, the property of the Bishop of Durham, is worked by Messrs. Fletcher and Soursby. The shaft is fifty-eight fathoms deep, and the main seam, four feet thick. Greencroft Hall, the property of Sir William Clavering, Bart., stands on the southern declivity of a hill, about a mile to the north of Lanchester, and is a spacious and elegant mansion, commanding excellent views of the neighbouring country. Little Greencroft, the seat of Robert Balleny, Esq., J.P., occupies a pleasant situation, about three miles north of Lanchester. The Methodists have a commodious chapel in this township.

HEALYFIELD, a township, about eight miles north of Wolsingham, comprises an area of 1,221 acres, and its rateable value is £1,022. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 145; in 1811, 156; in 1821, 161; in 1831, 159; in 1841, 189; and in 1851, 299. The principal proprietors are the dean and chapter of Durham, John Greenwell, Esq., the University of Durham, Mrs. Emmerson, and Matthew Armstrong, Esq. Here are lead mines, the property of the dean and chapter, and in the occupancy of William Muschamp and Co. The lead mill, however, is situated at the village of Castleside, which is partly in Healyfield township, and partly in the parish of Muggleswick. Bishop Hugh granted the vill of Healy to Alan de Chilton in exchange for Alan's interest in the bishop's vill of Cornforth. In 1349, Richard de Chilton gave this manor to Sir John Stryveln, who, in 1382, alienated it to John Nevill, Lord of Raby, by whom it was granted to William de Lanchester, vicar of St. Oswald's, and William Graystones, chaplain. The estate was afterwards conveyed to the dean and chapter of Durham, and is now held by the proprietors above-mentioned. Here is a parochial school, which formerly served as a chapel-of-ease to Lanchester, but service has been discontinued for some years. It is endowed with £3 per annum from Lord Crewe's trustees, and £1 from the dean and chapter. John Jack, teacher. Alansford, on the Derwent, is supposed to have derived its name from Alan de Chilton, the old lord of Healyfield. The ford has been superseded by a bridge, and the place has long been celebrated for the beauty of its scenery.

HOMESIDE township is principally the property of John Faucett, Esq., Mrs. Bewick, Miss Cookson, the heirs of the late Anthony Wilkinson, R. H. Gee, Esq., the heirs of the late William Ellison, Esq., William Well, Esq., the trustees of the late Thomas Fenwick, Esq., Mrs. Allgood, and W. W. Burdon, Esq. Its area is 2,860 acres, and the rateable value £2,749. The population in 1801 was 179; in 1811, 202; in 1821, 228; in 1831, 215; in 1841, 610; and in 1851, in consequence of the opening of new coal mines and ironstone works, it had increased to 1,012 souls. At the period of the compilation of Boldon Book, this estate was held by one mark rent, and the service of watching the bishop's deer for forty days in fence time, and by the carriage of wine with a draught of four oxen. A family, bearing the name, held Homeside at an early period, and it afterwards became the property of the Umfreviles, from whom it passed to the Tempests. It was forfeited by the latter family at the time of the rebellion of the north, and was granted by Queen Elizabeth, in 1573, to Sir Henry Gate, from whose heir it was transferred, in 1595, to the Jackson family. It was subsequently held by the Whittinghams, and is now possessed by the proprietors above-mentioned. There are several extensive collieries in this township. Homeside Colliery, which is worked by Messrs. Thomas Hedley and Brothers, is fifty fathoms deep, the seam being four feet four inches.

The Hamlet of Homeside is about 6 miles north-west of Durham. Here is a national school, a neat stone building, erected by subscription in 1847 and possessing accommodation for eighty children. It is under the patronage of the rector of Lanchester, who, together with the different coal owners, contributes towards its support. William Jackson, teacher.

IVESTON township contains 1,925 acres, and its rateable value is £4,444 10s. The principal landowners are Baker Baker, Esq., Edward Richardson, Esq., Jonathan Richardson, Esq., John Moore, Esq., Robert Dunn, Esq., Edward Smith, Esq., and others. The population in 1801 was 251; in 1811, 14; in 1821, 238; in 1831, 212; in 1841, 448; and in 1851, in consequence of the opening of new coal mines and ironstone works, it had attained 2,500 souls. From Boldon Book we learn that Iveston paid two marks, provided a milch cow, ploughed one acre and a half of the lord's land at Lanchester, attended the great chase with two greyhounds, and undertook the carriage of wine with a wain of eight oxen. Soon after, the old records relating to this place mention a local family, and previous to Hatfield's Survey, Iveston became the property of Kepier Hospital. After the suppression of the monastic establishments, John Cockburn sold the manor of Iveston to John Leath, from whom it passed to the Tempest family, with whom it still remains. There are four coal pits in this township.

The Village of Iveston occupies an elevated situation, about three miles north-west of Lanchester.

High Brooms, in this township, contains a neat Catholic Church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert. It is a plain Gothic structure, and, having been enlarged about ten years ago, will now accommodate 240 persons. A larger church is much needed in consequence of the increasing numbers of the congregation. Rev. Francis Kearney, priest.

Crook Hall, formerly the seat of the Bakers, is situated a little to the west of Iveston. By Boldon Book, it was a free manor, and, it appears, belonged to the De la Leys, of Witton, who, soon after the date of the record, gave it to the church of Durham. It subsequently belonged to the Kirkleys, Thornions, Lumleys, and Shaftoes, coming ultimately to the Bakers, its present proprietors. Here is Crook Hall Iron Works, the property of the Derwent Iron Company.

The greater portion of Leadgate is in this township. Here is the Leadgate Iron and Brass Foundry, worked by J. G. Forster and Co. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have places of worship in Leadgate Schools, which are in the management of the iron company.

Biography.—Thomas Baker, an eminent antiquary, was a native of this township, where he was born 14th September, 1656. Having received his early education at Durham, he entered St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1674, and became rector of Long Newton in 1687. He refused to read James II's declaration of liberty of conscience, for which he was disgraced by his bishop; and, having refused to take the oath to William III., he resigned his living in 1690, when he retired to his fellowship at St. John's, Cambridge.

He was subsequently dispossessed of his fellowship, but continued to reside in the college as commoner master till his death, which took place July 2nd, 1740. He was the author of "Reflections on Learning, shewing the insufficiency in its several particulars, in order to evince the Usefulness and Necessity of Revelation, London, 1710;" "The Preface to Bishop Fisher's Funeral Sermon for Margaret, Countess of Richmond and Derby, 1768;" "A History of St. John's College, 1670;" &c., &c.

The Right Rev. Thomas Smith, D.D., Bishop of Bolina, and Vicar Apostolic of the northern district, was born at the Brooms, 21st March, 1763. On the completion of his twelfth year, he was sent to the Catholic Seminary of Sedgely Park, in Staffordshire, where he remained two years, and was then removed to the English College at Douay, where he was ordained priest in his twenty-fifth year. At the commencement of the French revolution, he suffered an imprisonment of sixteen months, after which he was released and permitted to return to England, where he arrived in March 1795. He was soon afterwards appointed to the Durham mission; and on the 11th March, 1810, was consecrated Bishop of Bolina, and appointed coadjutor to Bishop Gibson, Vicar Apostolic of the northern district. On the demise of the latter prelate, in June, 1821, Dr. Smith succeeded to the northern district over which he presided till his decease on July 30th, 1831. He was a man of great learning and piety, an excellent classical scholar, and a profound theologian.

LANCHESTER township contains 4,206 acres, and its rateable value is £3,645. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 708; in 1811, 834; in 1821, 659; in 1831, 574; in 1841, 579; and in 1851, 752. The principal landowners are Sir William Clavering, Bart., Edward Taylor Smith, Esq., J. Fawcett, Esq., Matthew Kearney, Esq., R. Balleney Esq., Rev. Joseph Thompson, Mr. William Reed, Mr. Thomas Reed, and Mr. George Walton. Coal and freestone are abundant in this township. Lanchester appears in Doldon Book as one of the great manors of the see of Durham; and contained forty-one oxgangs, each consisting of eight acres. Twenty tenants in villinage paid for each of these oxgangs thirtypence, and, with the help of the cottagers, mowed the whole of the meadows, and won and led the hay, and brought the hogs from the forest; and whilst they mowed, they had a corody; and when they drove the swine each had one loaf. Four cottagers held eight acres for four shillings; and some held their lands on more honourable services. The meadows and the cow pastures were held by the bishop. At the time of Hatfield's Survey the lands were held by exchequer-tenants, free tenants, bond tenants, and cottagers. At present, the greater portion of the lands are held by copy of court-roll under the see of Durham. The manor includes the several vills of Lanchester Broom, Flass, Burnop and Hamsteels, Coldpike Hill, Broomsheels, Satley, Butsfield, Benfieldside, Billingside, Kyo, Rowley, and Roughside. A very extensive division of common lands took place here in 1773.

The Village of Lanchester is about six miles north-west-by-west of Durham; and, though now but a small straggling place, was once of considerable magnitude and importance; for, on an eminence between the river Browney and the Smalhopeburn, a little to the west of the village, are the remains of a Roman station, which, on the authority of the itinerary of Richard of Cirencester, is conceived to be the Epeincum of the Romans. On three sides, the ground falls from the camp; on the west only it is commanded by a high moorland hill, whose prospect ranges from the Cheviots in the north, to the Cleveland hills in the south. This station is one of the largest class, containing an area of about eight acres. The walls may be distinguished on all sides. The south wall, though deprived of its facing stone, stands eight feet high, and shows nine courses of thin rubble stone, arranged edgewise in a leaning direction. On the outside of the south-east angle, a subterranean chamber has been discovered; the descent to it is by steps. It is difficult to conjecture the use to which it has been put. The masonry of some chambers near the south-east corner of the station, which, when first opened, were found to be full of bones, is very perfect. Lanchester seems to have been garrisoned almost throughout the entire period of the Roman occupation; a large proportion of the coins found at it are of the higher empire, but the series extend down to Valentinian. The name of Gordian occurs on two inscriptions, as the restorer of some of the buildings. The destruction of the station was probably owing to some sudden and violent catastrophe. Surtees says: "The red ashes of the basilica and bath, the vitrified flooring, and the metallic substances evidently run by fire, which occur amongst the ruins, form a strong indication that the structure perished in the flames." Two aqueducts appear to have brought water to this station from a distance of several miles. This is remarkable, as several deep wells have been found near the camp, and there are open springs within fifty paces from the south and east wall. The surrounding moor abounds in iron-stone; of this the Romans appear to have availed themselves, for immense heaps of slag, of ancient production, have been found in the neighbourhood.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient structure of hewn stone, and comprises nave, aisle, chancel, tower, and porch. The tower, which is seventy feet in height, is embattled, and strengthened by flying buttresses. The nave is about forty-five feet long, and has an aisle on each side, formed by two rows of handsome pillars, supporting pointed arches, with zig-zag mouldings. The chancel is separated from the nave by a circular arch decorated with zig-zag mouldings and rising from clustered pillars, and is stilled with carved oak seats. Over the vestry door is a group of sculptured figures in bas-relief. In the centre is the Blessed Virgin seated in a chair of state, surrounded by angels, while the old dragon lies prostrated underneath. The eastern window was formerly filled with stained glass; and there are still traces of the adoration of the Magi, with the legend, ECCE MAGI VENI DEUM ADOR. The church contains a recumbent effigy, in Stanhope marble, of an ecclesiastic with elevated hands holding a chalice, and also several mural monuments. Lanchester was rectorial till Bishop Beck, in 1283, made it collegiate for a dean with two assistant vicars, and seven prebendaries, three of whom were to find each a vicar chaplain, and the other four were to support a vicar in holy orders. The dean was also to provide proper chaplains for the several chapels of ease in the parish. After a succession of eighteen deans, the college of Lanchester, in common with the other religious institutions of the country, was dissolved. Its revenues were then valued at £49 3s. 4d., but were valued in the Lincoln taxation at £90 13s. 4d. The following pensions were paid to the surviving members of the collegiate body 1553:—To Robert Hindmer, dean, £30; William Frankland, prebendary of Iveston, £8; Lancelot Knagge, prebendary of Buttsfield, £2; Richard Burncheper, prebendary of Medomsley, £5 6s. 8d.; John Mylner, prebendary of Greencroft, £4 13s. 4d.; William Knagge, prebendary of Esh, £5. Small pensions were also reserved for the perpetual curate of Lanchester, and for the curates of the dependant chapelries of Medomsley, Esh, and Slatley. The rest of the collegiate possessions, both land and tithes, were distributed by the crown to various persons. The parish register commences in 1560. The living is now a perpetual curacy, and, not being in charge, pays no first fruits or tenths. It is rated at £14 8s. 4d., returned at £145; gross income, £126. The tithes were commuted in 1773. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; incumbent, the Rev. John F. Feushaw.

The Parsonage House is situated near the church, and has a good garden attached.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a small place of worship, which was erected in 1821.

The Parish School was erected by subscription in 1824, upon the site of a previous structure, and is endowed with £10 per annum, left by the late Sir Thomas Clavering, Bart., the interest of £84, bequeathed by one John Snaith, and £5 a year from the trustees of Lord Crewe's charity.

Petty Sessions are held at the police office, Lanchester, once a fortnight, before John Greenwell, Esq., Robert Balleny, Esq., and Matthew Kearney, Esq., magistrates. Henry Smales, Esq., clerk to the court.

There is an Agricultural and Cattle Show held here annually in October, of which E. T. Smith, Esq., is president. There is also a Floral and Horticultural Show held in August, the president of which is the Hon. George Liddell; vice-presidents, E. T. Smith, Esq., and Matthew Kearney, Esq.; treasurer, Nicholas Greenwell, Esq.; secretaries, W. A. Newby and F. J. Laycock.

The Lanchester Poor-Law Union comprises an area of 54,548 acres, and its population in 1801 was 20,073 souls. It is divided into the sub-districts of Tanfield and Lanchester, the former of which embraces Tanfield, Collierly, and Kyo; and the latter, Billingside, Medomsley, Ebchester, Benfieldside, Ealyfield, Conside-cum-Knitesley, Iveston, Greencroft, Homeside, Lanchester, Burnop and Hamsteels, Langley, Esh, Butsfield, Satley, Cornsey, Luggleswick, and Hedley Hope. The Union Workhouse is situated in Lanchester township, and the board of guardians meet there fortnightly. Robert Hall, Esq., chairman; Mr. Balleny, clerk to the board; William J. Jackson, surgeon; John Dunn, master; Elizabeth Dunn, matron.

Charities—Cuthbert Atkinson, in 1681, bequeathed a rent-charge of £3 per annum, issuing out of his lands at Woodside, to the poor of the parish of Lanchester, to be paid and distributed at Easter and Christmas, by such persons as should enjoy his lands at Woodside, and by the curate or parson of Lanchester for the time being, to the most needy, indigent, helpless poor people. George Clavering, by a codicil to his will, 18th May, 1793, left £265 10s. Four-per-cent Stock upon trust, out of the dividends of which £10 per annum was to be paid to the schoolmaster of Lanchester, for instructing four boys in the English grammar, writing, and arithmetic, until they should be fit to be put out to business, such four boys to be nominated by the person who for the time being should be in possession of his estate at Greencroft. Old Parish Stock.—It appears from an old parish book, that from 1732 to 1751, there was a sum of £110 placed out on bond; and the interest thereof added to Wilkinson's charity, hereafter mentioned. It further appears, that in 1752, the parish officers having purchased some land, the payment of interest was discontinued. It seems that, at the period above mentioned, the amount of the poor's stock was laid out in the purchase of a close, called Lint Lands, containing 3a. 2r. 16p., and also a house with out-buildings, and a garth and cottage in Satley, part of which premises have since been re-sold, and the residue now forms part of the estate held by the parish officers, with the lands belonging to Wilkinson's charity. Rowland Wilkinson, by his will, dated 20th April, 1674, gave all his freehold lands at Satley in this parish for the use of the poor of the parish of Lanchester and Satley, to be let by the churchwardens and overseers, and the rents to be distributed by them amongst the said poor, with the rest of the parish stock. The estate now consists of a farm-house and several closes of old inclosed land, containing 52a. 1r. 27p., and 32 acres of allotments, set out on an inclosure in 1781, the rent of which is distributed in accordance with the intentions of the donor. Jane Tempest left a donation of £6 a year for clothing and teaching a number of poor children of Lanchester parish, and £4 a year for the relief of poor housekeepers. Her sister, Elizabeth, by will, in 1785, left £200 upon trust, out of the interest of which £2 2s. in augmentation of the said charities, and the residue to be distributed amongst poor prisoners in the gaol and house of correction at Durham. See also the various chapelries and townships.

The Ford, the seat and property of Matthew Kearney, Esq., is a handsome modern mansion, situated in a beautiful vale, about half a mile from Lanchester, surrounded by rich enclosures, and enlivened by the Browney and Smalhope Beck. The house has been recently much improved, and a neat oratory annexed, by the present proprietor. Previous to Hatfield's Survey, this estate gave name to John de Fenhall and Gamel del Ford.

Coldpike Hall is about half a mile west of the Ford, and is the seat of Edward Taylor Smith, Esq., by whom it has been lately rebuilt. The estate was, in ancient times, the property of the monks of Durham; but ultimately became a free manor, and at the close of the fourteenth century was the property of the Parke family. In Elizabeth's reign, it was held by the Cocksons, and subsequently by various owners.

Newbiggin is a hamlet in this township, about a mile west of Lanchester, and is chiefly inhabited by farmers.

LANGLEY township is the property of the Earl of Durham, and comprises an area of 2,378 acres. Its population in 1801 was 83; in 1811, 102; in 1821, 97; in 1831, 75; in 1841, 81; and in 1851, 80 souls. At the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, Arco, the steward of Bishop Pudsey, held Langley, one half of which was presented to him by the bishop, who had purchased it, and the remainder he held under the rent of half a mark. The estate reverted by escheat to the see of Durham, and was granted to Henry de l'Isle, one of the early lords of Wynyard. It, however, again reverted to the see, and was granted by Bishop Beck to Henry Lord Percy. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, it was the property of the Scroops, who continued its possessors for several generations, and is now held by the nobleman above-mentioned.

The Hamlet of Langley is about five miles north-by-west of Durham. The ruins of Langley Hall are situated on the southern slope of a hill, which commands a rich and varied view over the vale of the Browney, having the cathedral and the Durham hills in the distance. It is difficult now to trace the ancient arrangements of this old mansion.

Directory.—John Cumming, jun., land agent; John Jefferson, vict. and blacksmith; and the farmers are John Cumming, West House; and Martin Brown, Langley Mill.

MEDOMSLEY CHAPELRY.

MEDOMSLEY township is principally the property of Matthew Hunter, Esq., R. S. Surtees, Esq., Henry Jefferson, Esq., W. R. Eddows, Messrs. Brookbank and Allgood, Jonathan Richardson, Esq., Henry Smales, Esq., R. H. Gee, Esq., Rev. James Midgley, Rev. Septimus Greville, and some other small proprietors. The trustees of the late Marquis of Bute are the owners of the common. The area of the township is 4,823 acres, and its rateable value, £4,909 10s. The number of inhabitants in 1801, inclusive of Conside-cum-Knitsley, was 754; in 1811, of Medomsley alone, 891; in 1821, 461; in 1831, 466; in 1841, 796; and in 1851, 840. The Bradley Iron Works and Bradley Brick Works are in this township; the former are in the occupancy of E. O. Tregelles and Co., and the latter of Messrs. Hunter and Co. There is also a steel forge, which is carried on by Charles Cookson and Company. At the time of the compilation of the Boldon Book, Medomsley was a free manor, held by a monied rent. The Feltons are the earliest recorded proprietors, and from them it passed by marriage to the Hastings family, by one of whom it was sold to the Carrs of Cocken. It afterwards became the property of the Hunters, and is now held by the proprietors above-mentioned.

The Village of Medomsley is pleasantly situated on an eminence, about nine miles south-west by west of Newcastle, and is surrounded by rich, well-cultivated lands, which command a fine view of the beautiful vale of the Derwent, and of the bold lands north of the Tyne.

The Church or Chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, occupies an elevated position, and may be seen from a considerable distance. It consists of nave and chancel, without tower or aisles, and contains a few mural monuments. The parish register commences in 1608. The living is a perpetual curacy, not in charge, and pays no first fruits nor procuration; it is rated at £10 8s. 4d., and returned at £110; gross income, £141. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; incumbent, Rev. Edmund J. Midgley, M.A.

The Parochial School is held in the vestry of the church.

(Charities.—The commissioners for inquiring concerning charities report that "In the parliamentary returns of 1786, it is stated, that John Hunter in 1675, John Cuming and Mary Burton, gave several sums to the poor of Medomsley, amounting to £80. From an entry in a book containing the overseers' accounts for the township of Medomsley, under the date of 1785, it appears that £20 was then in the hands of John Hunter and Cuthbert Hunter. Cuthbert Hunter was succeeded in his property by his son, General Martin Hunter; and his agent, Cuthbert Surtees, for several years paid 10s. yearly to Miss Hunter, sister of General M. Hunter, residing at Medomsley, by whom the said sum has been distributed to poor women at her discretion. John Hunter died some years ago, leaving two daughters, one of whom married Stamp Brooksbank, Esq.; and since Mr. John Hunter's death, George White, of Medomsley, has frequently received sums of money from Mrs. Brooksbank for distribution, which he has given to poor widows in the village, returning a list of their names, with the sum given to each to Mrs. Brooksbank."

CONSIDERUM.—KNITSLEY township contains 2,617 acres, and its rateable value is £4,513. The principal proprietors are the Countess of Coventry, Jonathan Richardson, Esq., Robert Taylor, Esq., George Baker, Esq., the heirs of the late John Layburne, Esq., and the heirs of the late John G. Blacke, Esq. The population in 1801 was returned with that of Medomsley; in 1811 it was 139; in 1821, 141; in 1831, 146; in 1841, 195; and in 1851, 2,777 souls. This township includes the greater portion of the village of Berry Edge, which is densely peopled, as also extensive iron works, fire-brick and tile manufactories, saw mills, collieries, &c. There are two goods stations here; one on the North-Eastern line, situated at Leadgate, and the other on the Stockton and Darlington line. Conside stands on the edge of the Derwent Vale, about twelve miles north-west of Durham; and, at the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, was held by Arnold Pistor, under 24s. rent. In 1370, Thomas Grey died seised of half the manor of Conside; but the whole was possessed by Sir Thomas Grey, who was attainted in the reign of Henry V. The family estates were subsequently restored to Sir Thomas Grey, by Bishop Neville. In 1481, the Middletons held half the manor, which passed from them to the Andersons. We afterwards find the Blenkinsops, Halls, Wilkinsons, and others, recorded as possessors. Knitsley, a joint township with Conside, was anciently the property of a family bearing the local name; but at the time of Hatfield's Survey it was free land. It was subsequently held by the Surtees family, and afterwards by the Claxtons and Eures.

Berry Edge, a village in this township, contains two Methodist Chapels, and a commodious school belonging to the Conside Iron Works. A news-room has been recently established, which is well supplied with the various papers and periodicals. W. J. Scott, secretary.

The Conside Iron Works, the property of the Derwent Iron Company, were established about the year 1841, and are now the largest in the kingdom, employing upwards of 6,000 persons. Iron in its different varieties, from pig iron to finished bar iron, is manufactured here; there are extensive rolling mills, for rolling plates for boilers, shipbuilding, and other purposes; George Forster, head manager. In connection with these works there are several collieries, the property of the iron company.

Lady Londonderry's Infirmary, situated in Tempest-place, is a handsome building, in the Gothic style, erected in 1844, at a cost of £800, and will accommodate thirteen patients.

MUGGLESWICK PARISH.

This parish, which possesses no dependant townships, is bounded on the north by the Derwent, on the west by Hunstonworth and Edmundbyers, on the south by Wolingham, on the south-east and east by Lanchester, and on the north-east by the Derwent. Its area is 7,098 acres, and its rateable value, £1,774. It contained in 1801, 201 inhabitants; in 1811, 224; in 1821, 278; in 1831, 298; in 1841, 421; and in 1851, 688. The earliest notice of this place occurs in the time of Bishop Pudsey, who gave it to the convent of Durham in exchange for Hardwick. About the middle of the thirteenth century, the priors of Durham had a park here, some vestiges of the old wall of which, as well as a small portion of a building thought to have been the lodge, still remain. Bishop Bainbridge granted to the convent of Durham a confirmatory charter of Muggleswick, and also 216 acres of wood and waste lands at Horsleyhope, given to them by Bishop Kirkham. The southern portion of this and the neighbouring parishes of Edmondbyers and Hunstonworth, which stretch westward along the banks of the Derwent, form a continuous region of rugged hills, which, though repulsive in their aspect, are rich in minerals. The landowners are the dean and chapter of Durham, who are also the possessors of the manorial rights.

The Village of Muggleswick is situated at the foot of a steep hill, nine miles north-by-east of Stanhope, and eighteen miles west-south-west of Newcastle.

The Church is a plain stone structure, which was rebuilt about the year 1728, on the site of the former church, whose materials were chiefly used in the construction of the present edifice. The parish register commences in 1730. The living is a perpetual curacy, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of Durham, and pays no first fruits nor tenths. The parish is free of tithes, except a portion of Cold Rowley and Muggleswick, which produces about £34 per annum; the remainder of the income of the living is derived from farm-rents in the parish. Patrons, the dean and chapter; incumbent, the Rev.—Cundill.

The Parsonage House, lately erected, is a neat stone building, situated near the church.

There is a Wesleyan Chapel at Watergate Castleside, which was erected in 1805, and will accommodate about 250 persons; a Sunday-school, attended by about 100 scholars, is held in the chapel. At Cold Rowley, there is a Particular Baptist Chapel, rebuilt in 1823, and containing 160 sittings. A Sunday-school is also held here. Rev. George Whitehead, minister, who resides at Shotley Bridge, where he also officiates.

The Parish School is a neat building, erected in 1852, and is supported by subscription.

There is a smelting mill at Watergate Castleside, which belongs to the firm of Matthew Byers and Co. Matthew Elliott, agent

RYTON PARISH.

This parish embraces the townships of Crawcrook, Ryton, and Ryton Woodside, the other townships which were formerly included in this parish having been formed into separate parishes.

CRAWCROOK township is chiefly the property of Lord Ravensworth, Archdeacon Croft, J. C. Lamb, Esq., Robert Surtees, Esq., Joseph Cowen, Esq., and others. Its area is 1,302 acres, and its rateable value £2,257. The population in 1801 was 325; in 1811, 268; in 1821, 308; in 1831, 340; in 1841, 290; and in 1851, 320 souls. At the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, Crawcrook was on lease with the villain service; but before the time of Hatfield's Survey, it had become a free manor, and it is stated, "Robert Horsley holds half the vill of Crawcrook, by knight's service and ten shillings (and a toft and forty acres, called Bradley, by one penny rent, on St. Cuthbert's day, in September)." In 1544, Crawcrook was transferred by marriage to the family of Carnaby, who, after the lapse of a few generations, sold the estate in small parcels. The other portion of Crawcrook was the property of St. Giles' Hospital, and, after the dissolution of the religious houses, bore the name of Little Keyper, which John Watson, of Newcastle, acquired in 1547, by purchase of John Heath, Esq. The estate was afterwards held by the Delavel, Sander, Jollie, and other families; and is now the property of the gentlemen above-mentioned.

The Village of Crawcrook is about a mile west of Ryton, and contains chapels belonging to the Independents and Wesleyan Methodists, and a free school which was erected in 1814, and is supported by Lord Ravensworth: it is attended by eighty children of both sexes. There is a library in connexion with the school. John A. Craiggy, teacher.

Bradley Hall, the seat of James Crawhall, Esq., a mile to the west of Crawcrook, is a neat mansion, sheltered by fine woods, which extend to the Tyne, and add much to the beauty of the place. It was formerly the property of the Simpsons, but came by marriage into the Ravensworth family.

Ryton township comprises an area of 1,302 acres, and its rateable value is £4,298 5s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 432; in 1811, 462; in 1821, 445; in 1831, 590; in 1841, 677; and in 1851, 739. Charles Towneley, Esq., Joseph C. Lamb, Esq., the Venerable Archdeacon Thorne, Lady Kinlock, Matthew W. Dunn, Esq., Joseph Cowen, Esq., and others, are the landowners. The manor of Ryton belongs to the see of Durham, under which the greater portion of the lands are held by lease or copy of court roll. From Boldon Book we learn that "The men of Ryton hold the vill on lease, with the demesne, the assize rents, the mill and the service due (from the villains), with a stock of one draught and two harrows, and twenty chalders of oats of the bishop's measure, and the fisheries; they pay £14 rent, make ladings like the men of Whickham, and, jointly with Crawcrook, provide the carriage of one tun of wine. The punder has five acres and the thraves like other punders, and renders thirty hens and two hundred eggs. The villains pay twenty-four hens and two hundred eggs." In Hatfield's Survey it is recorded that the prior of Brinkburn held two ox-gangs of land here, and a fishery in the river. The common belonging to the manor of Ryton was very extensive; it was divided in 1638, and again in 1669. Here is an extensive colliery, worked by the Stella Coal Company, and known as the Towneley and Whitfield Colliery.

The Village of Ryton is pleasantly situated on the south bank of the Tyne 7 miles west of Newcastle, and has a beautiful and interesting prospect to the east and north. During the summer months it is much resorted to by invalids and others on account of its salubrity. Ryton has frequently suffered from the incursions of the Scottish armies. In 1297, it was burned by the Scots under Wallace; and in 1640, it was the scene of panic and confusion, when Leslie, Montrose, and other leaders marched the Scottish troops to the banks of the Tyne opposite to Stells, where the English for some time impeded their progress. The village is remarkably well built and contains some excellent villa residences; at its west end there is a stone cross, which was erected in 1795. Hirings for servants take place here, annually, on the Friday before the 12th May and the Friday before the 22nd November.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is a handsome regular structure, consisting of nave, aisles, chancel, and western tower; the latter is surmounted by an octangular spire, covered with lead, which rises to the height of upwards of a hundred feet. The interior of the church is very neat; the nave is well pewed, and is separated from the chancel by an old oaken screen, beautifully carved; and several stained glass windows shed a 'dim religious light' through the venerable edifice. On the floor of the chancel, lies the recumbent effigy of a Benedictine monk, carved in Stanhope marble; there are also several mural monuments and inscriptions in different parts of the church. On the north side of the churchyard is a large barrow, twenty feet high, and covered with trees, which forms a beautiful object from the opposite side of the Tyne. The prospect from the cemetery is very picturesque, and embraces a variety of interesting objects. Ryton church formerly possessed an endowed chantry, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. The living is a rectory, valued in the Liber Regis at £42 10s.; gross income, £1,144. The parish register commences in 1581; and the tithes were commuted in 1823. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, the Ven. Archdeacon Thorp, D.D.; curate, Rev. David Akenhead, B.A.

The Rectory occupies a secluded situation, and possesses beautiful grounds, in which several Roman antiquities, brought from the Wall, are carefully preserved.

The Congregationalists have a room for worship here, with a residence for the minister, the Rev. D. Wilson, who also attends the chapel at Crawcrook. Each of these places is the private property of J. C. Lamb, Esq. It is purposed to erect, during the year 1856, on a site between Ryton and Crawcrook, a new chapel, which will be vested in trustees for the use of the Congregation, after which the Crawcrook Chapel will be converted into a school.

The Parish School is a good stone building, erected in 1792, and is attended by about eighty children of both sexes. It is supported by subscriptions and the following endowments, viz:—£5 per annum from Lord Crewe's trustees; £1 16s. a year from a small legacy, bequeathed by the late Walker Lawson, Esq.; £4 yearly, the rent of a portion of land; £6 12s. 8d. the interest of £210 in the Three-one-Fourth-per-Cents for the benefit of Royton School, being a donation from various subscribers to the Guarantee Fund of the Ryton Savings Bank, on the dissolution of that institution. In the vestry of the parish church there is a library for the use of the parishioners, which has been established principally by the contributions of the rector. George Lightfoot, schoolmaster and librarian.

Charities.—The following are the charities belonging to this parish as they now stand, viz:—The late Walker Lawson, Esq., of Ryton, £160; several small charities put together, £465 1s. 8d.; total, £625 1s. 8d. This sum was invested in the Three-per Cent Consols in 1804 and 1832, and now produces an interest of £18 15s., which, since the division of the ancient parish of Ryton, has been divided in the following manner: to Ryton, £12 10s. 5d., the remainder, £6 4s. 9d., to Winlaton parish. In 1826, the late Mrs. Cox invested the sum of £50 in the New-Four-per-Cents; and directed that the interest, now amounting to £1 15s. per annum, should be distributed amongst poor widows of the townships of Ryton, Ryton Woodside, and Crawcrook, on the 23rd December in each year. There is also a bequest of £100 of the late Alderman Simpson, the interest of which is distributed by the rector at Caudlemas; and a bequest of £50 by the late John Simpson, Esq.; the interest of which is distributed by the rector on the 23rd December. The following, although in the Ryton books, goes to Blaydon. A bequest of £102 7s. 7d. by the late Mr. Mulcaster, to the Blaydon School.

RYTON WOODSIDE township, situated to the south of Ryton, contains 2,502 acres, and its rateable value is £2,924. It contained in 1801, 885 inhabitants; in 1811, 838; in 1821, 1,057; in 1831, 951; in 1841, 1,059; and in 1851, 1,133. The landowners are Lord Ravensworth, Henry Silvertown, Esq., and a number of small proprietors. In 1592, Robert Hedworth died, seized of his messuage of Ryton Woodside; but, in 1691, it passed to Henry Jenison, Esq., of Newcastle, and, six years later, it became the property of the Surtees family. A new church is now in course of erection in this township, and, when completed, will serve as a chapel-of-ease to the mother church of Ryton.

Greenside is a village in this township, and contains a place of worship, belonging to the Wesleyan Reformers; a school, erected in 1813, which is supported by subscription, and a donation of £5 per annum from the trustees of Lord Crew's charity; a library and reading room—the latter in connec-

SATLEY CHAPELRY.

This chapelry includes the townships of Butsfield, Cornsey, Hedleyhope, and Satley, with parts, or allotments of commons belonging to Colliery, Kyo, Ledomsley, Greencroft, Adamsley, Homeside, and Ebchester.

BUTSFIELD township comprises an area of 1,422 acres, and its rateable value is £1,671. The population in 1801 and 1811 was returned with Lanchester township; in 1821, it was 226; in 1831, 285; in 1841, 252; and in 1851, 318 souls. The landowners are Jonathan Richardson, Esq., John Greenwell, Esq., John Burrell, Esq., E. T. Smith, Esq., Rev. T. C. Greville, Mrs. Pemberton, Sir William Clavering, Bart., the heirs of the late Thomas Emmerson, and the heirs of the late Mr. Dunn. The Ushaw Colliery Company also possess property in this township. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, this estate was held by a family bearing the local name. Sixty-nine acres were held of the bishop in capite, by homage and foreign service, and thirty-three shillings rent, for the non-performance of which the lands were seized by the lord, and it does not appear that they were ever restored.

The Village of Butsfield is pleasantly situated, about four-and-a-half miles west of Lanchester, in the midst of beautiful and picturesque scenery. Here is a saw-mill, worked by Cuthbert Richardson and John and Robert Hedley.

Woodlands, in this township, affords a pleasing instance of the triumphs of art and industry over the most difficult and discouraging obstacles to improvement. "Before and after the act for enclosing the moors and wastes within Lanchester parish was obtained," says a recent writer, "much discussion took place respecting the prudence of such a measure. Many considered the attempt as utterly hopeless; and the commissioners sold 1551 acres for about £8,174. Another allotment of 800 acres was sold, subject to a rent-charge of £30 a-year. Thomas White, Esq., of Retford, in the county of Nottingham, was the principal purchaser. He planted one half of the parcel of 300 acres with forest trees; and, under the shelter of another plantation of 211 acres, he planted sixteen acres with fruit-trees, which continue to flourish. Thus, by this gentleman's spirited exertions, a vast, lofty, and barren expanse of country, where the perplexed traveller wandered in ambiguous tracts, is now enclosed and clothed with rising plantations. His example has been successfully followed; and the barren fells are intersected with good roads: innumerable buildings are scattered over a dreary prospect; merchandise has now an expeditious passage to the villages, which were previous to this inclosure and cultivation, almost inaccessible except in summer; and the inhabitants, greatly increased in numbers, obtain with facility the principal comforts of life."

CORNSEY township is principally the property of Sir William Clavering Bart., the trustees of Ushaw College, William Cummings, Esq., Mrs. Pemberton, the executors of the late John Taylor, the executors of the late Hannah Longstaff, and Viscount Boyne. Its area is 3,404 acres. Its population in 1801 was 234; in 1811, 254; in 1821, 249; in 1831, 280; in 1841, 201; and in 1851, 370 souls. Here are several iron-stone drifts, collieries, and brick-works. This township and that of Hedleyhope were included in the north-west division of Darlington Ward until they were annexed to the west division of Chester Ward by an order of the Easter Sessions, 1830. At the time of the compilation of Bolton Book, Walter the Chamberlain held Cornsey and Hedleyhope by the payment of two marks, carrying wine with a draught of twelve oxen, and providing five cords at the bishop's great chase. In 1350, William de Raw died seised of half the manor of Cornsey. This moiety was afterwards held by the Earls of Westmorland, and continued so till the confiscation of their estates. The proprietors at present are those above-mentioned.

The Village of Cornsey is about five miles north-west-by-west of Wolsingham. Here are almshouses for six poor men and six poor women, erected and endowed in 1811, by William Russell, Esq., of Brantepeth; and a school, which possesses an endowment of £20 per annum for the instruction of twenty poor children, and £15 a-year from Lord Crewe's charity.

HEDLEYHOPE township contains 1,506 acres, the property of Edward Taylor Smith, Esq., Henry Pickering, Esq., the executors of the late Thomas Fenwick, Esq., and Sir Henry Smythe, Bart., and its rateable value is £1,271. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 47; in 1811, 48; in 1821, 51; in 1831, 72; in 1841, 48; and in 1851, 91. The township has unlimited right of common upon Cornsey and Hedleyhope common. Here is a colliery in the occupancy of Joseph Pease, Esq. Hedleyhope was severed from Cornsey previous to Hatfield's Survey, and belonged to the family of Delisle, of whom it was held by the Nevilles; and after the seizure of their estates by the crown, this township seems to have been purchased by the Sandersons.

SATLEY township comprises an area of 901 acres, and its rateable value is £512 10s. The population in 1801 was 78; in 1811, 88; in 1821, 103; in 1831, 112; in 1841, 132; and in 1851, 287 souls. In 1324, Robert de Greenwell held the vill of Satley of the see of Durham in chief, by 40s. rent, and 13s. 4d. in addition for the manor mill. Subsequently, the families of Merely, Chambre, Hesswell, Millot, and Rippon, held lands here. The present proprietors are Sir William Clavering, Bart., John Greenwell, Esq., William Rippon, Esq., and Mrs. Pemberton.

The Village of Satley occupies a pleasant situation in a narrow vale, about five miles north-east of Wolsingham.

The Church or Chapel is a neat stone edifice, consisting of nave, chancel, and square tower, and contains 150 sittings, many of which are free. In 1291, Philip de St. Helena, rector of Lanchester, granted to this chapelry a general release of all tithes, oblations, and altarage, within Satley and Butseld. Satley afterwards became a mere chapel-of-ease to Lanchester parish, from which it was again severed on receiving an augmentation from Queen Anne's bounty in 1768. The parish register commences in 1797. The living is a perpetual curacy, not in charge, of the certified value of £11 4s., returned at £80; gross income, £68. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; incumbent, the Rev. Joseph Thompson.

The Parsonage is a handsome stone house, situated near the church.

The Parochial School is a neat stone building, which serves also as a post-office, and has an endowment of £10 per annum, given by Miss Greenwell, of roomshields. It will accommodate sixty children. John M'Ewan, teacher.

Broomshields is an estate in this township, which has been held by the Greenwell family for upwards of four centuries, Peter Greenwell of Bromsheles, occurring as early as 1488. Broomshields House is a neat and convenient mansion, occupying a pleasant situation.

STELLA DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish, formed by an order in council, bearing date 8th August, 1845, comprises the township of Stella, formerly in Ryton parish, and the whole of Blaydon and Derwenthaugh, formerly in the parish of Widdrington. Its population in 1851 was 2,479 persons, of whom 1,245 were males and 1,234 females; there were at the same period 385 inhabited houses, 6 uninhabited, and 9 in course of erection. The population, &c. have, however, much increased since the period just mentioned.

STELLA township comprises an area of 319 acres, and its rateable value is £1,337 5s. Charles Towneley, Esq., of Towneley, is lord of the manor and laud owner. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 314; in 1811, 341; in 1821, 421; in 1831, 482; in 1841, 563; and in 1851, 565. At the time when Boldon Book was compiled, Stella was held by the son of William the Moneyer, or master of the bishop's mint, as the landed pension of his services. Between 1143 and 1149, Stella was granted by Bishop William de Sancta Barbara, to the community of St. Bartholomew's Convent, in Newcastle, who seem to have remained its possessors till the period of the suppression of the religious houses. Shortly after the dissolution, Stella became the property and residence of the Tempests of Newcastle, a mercantile branch of the ancient house of Homeside. It subsequently passed by marriage to the Widdringtons, from whom it has descended to the present proprietor.

The Village of Stella is pleasantly situated on the Tyne, and on the west side of the rivulet which divides it from Blaydon, about 6 miles west of Newcastle. It is well situated for manufactures, and contains a wharf, belonging to the London Lead Company.

Stella Hall, once the seat of the Tempests, and now the residence of John D. Lambton, Esq., is a fine old mansion, with the Towneley arms over the principal entrance. It stands near the Tyne, and its north front overlooks Stella Haugh, which is intersected by branches of the river, and famous as being the scene of the defeat of the English army by the Scottish Presbyterians.

The domestic Catholic chapel belonging to the hall having become too small for its increasing congregation, a handsome stone church, in the Gothic style, was erected at a short distance from the mansion house in 1829, and was considerably enlarged in 1849. It is now a very handsome structure, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Thomas Aquinas, and contains a richly ornamented high altar; a Lady Chapel, with a beautiful statue of the Blessed Virgin; and some richly stained glass windows. One of the latter is a mortuary window, in memory of the late Rev. Thomas Parker, sometime pastor of this congregation. A burial ground is attached, in the centre of which is a handsome carved stone cross. The presbytery, or priest's house, adjoins the church, and is in the same style of architecture. Very Rev. Canon Platt is the present priest.

Schools have been erected at the head of the burial ground, and comprise separate apartments for boys and girls, with class rooms, &c., all of which are fitted up in a superior manner. An old building at the back serves as an infant school. The average number of children in attendance is eighty. Richard W. Heaphy and Mary Skaife, teachers.

BLAYDON is a considerable village in this parish, formerly in that of Winlaton, about five and a half miles west of Newcastle, where there are extensive chain and chain cable manufactories, chemical works, collieries, coke ovens, engine works, fire-brick works, bottle works, iron works, &c. This village has rapidly increased in size and population, and bids fair to become, at no distant period, a place of considerable importance. In 1828, a joint-stock company was formed for constructing a suspension bridge over the Tyne, from the township of Winlaton to Scotswood, in the county of Northumberland, and for making convenient roads and approaches thereto. By an act of parliament, which received the royal assent 18th April, 1829, the company was incorporated under the name of "The Scotswood Bridge Company." The spot chosen for the erection of this bridge was about 300 yards west of the hamlet of Derwenthaugh. It was begun in August, 1829, and opened, with great ceremony, on the 12th April, 1831. The design was furnished by Mr. Green, architect, of Newcastle, under whose superintendence the works were conducted. The two piers are built in the Norman style, and, together with the land abutments, are constructed of solid ashlar masonry. The distance between the points of suspension is 370 feet, with two half arches of 130 feet each, making the total length of the bridge 670 feet. There are four suspending chains, each consisting of four flat bars, in ten-foot lengths (four inches by one inch), coupled together with five plates, eight inches broad and one inch thick, with strong connecting bolts. The roadway, twenty-two feet in width, is constructed of Memel timber, having a strong longitudinal beam on each side, with transverse joints bolted on to the same, and overlaid with strong planks, upon which is spread a composition of prepared tar and gravel, which renders it impervious to water. The masonry work was executed per contract by Messrs. Welch and Sons, of Gateshead, and the chains by Messrs. Walker and Yates, at their iron works, near Birmingham. The total cost of the bridge was about £15,000. A situation more picturesque than the one occupied by this bridge can scarcely be imagined. The country on each side is a chosen spot for pleasure excursions, and is enriched "with all the attractive charms which nature yields," while the river itself adds an exhaustless variety of feature to the landscape.

The Parish Church, which is situated at Blaydon, and dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a neat stone structure, in the early English style, consisting of nave, chancel, and south porch, but possesses neither tower nor spire. It was erected in 1844, at an expense of about £2400, and was consecrated the following year by the Bishop of Durham. It contains 332 sittings, 17 of which are free and unappropriated. The tithes were commuted in 1835 for £27. The patronage is vested in the crown and the Bishop of Durham, who present alternately. Incumbent, the Rev. William Brown, B.A.

Here are Primitive and Wesleyan Methodist Chapels. The former is a good stone building, erected by subscription in 1854, at a cost of £600, and will seat about 100 persons. The Wesleyan Methodist Reformers meet for worship in the Mechanics' Institute.

St. Cuthbert's National School is an elegant stone structure, erected by subscription and by government grants, in 1858, at an expense of about £1400. The school, which is under government inspection, is conducted by highly efficient teachers, both of whom are certificated, and is attended by upwards of 250 children of both sexes. The Infant School, now in course of erection, will, when completed, be capable of accommodating 120 pupils. There is a good library, containing upwards of 400 volumes, in connection with the school. J. J. Moses and Mrs. Moses, teachers.

The Blaydon and Stella Mechanics' Institute was erected by subscription in 1852, at a cost of upwards of £600. It is a handsome and commodious structure, in a modern style of architecture, and comprises reading room, library, and large lecture hall: the latter of which serves as a school during the week, and as a place of worship for the Wesleyan Reformers on Sundays. The newsroom is well supplied with the various metropolitan and provincial journals, periodicals, &c., and the library contains upwards of 700 volumes. The institution now numbers about 130 members. President, Joseph Cowen, Esq.; vice-president, Mr. Thomas Valans; secretary, Mr. Oliver; librarian, Mr. William Elder.

In the village there is a Building Society and a Sick Benefit Society, both of which are in a flourishing condition.

Blaydon Gas Works were established in 1853 by Joseph Cowen, Esq., of Blaydon Burn, and comprise one gasometer, capable of containing 14,000 cubic feet of gas, which is supplied to the public at 6s. per 1,000 cubic feet.

WHICKHAM PARISH.

This parish, which contains the townships of Fellside, Lowside, Swalwell and Whickham, is bounded on the north by the Tyne, on the west by Ryton, on the south-west and south by the chapelries of Lamesley and Tanfield, and on the east by the parish of Gateshead. The area of the parish is 5,200 acres, and its rateable value, £14,646. The principal landowners are Lord Ravensworth, Sir William Clavering, Bart., John Bowes, Esq., Ralph Carr, Esq., and a number of freeholders. The population in 1801 was 3,659; in 1811, 3,746; in 1821, 3,713; in 1831, 3,848; in 1841, 4,319; and in 1851, 5,565 souls.

FELLSIDE township contains Gibside estate and several small hamlets; its area and rateable value are included in the parish returns. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was returned with the parish; in 1811, it was 501; in 1821, 455; in 1831, 419; in 1841, 593; and in 1851, in consequence of the opening of a new colliery and other works, it had increased to 1,608.

Gibside is situated on the river Derwent, six miles south-west of Gateshead. "It is difficult," says a recent topographer, "to convey any adequate idea of the beautiful and magnificent scenery of this place. The visitor enters these enchanting grounds by a serpentine road, which, for upwards of a mile, winds through the bosom of a thick forest; sometimes on the brink of a deep ravine, and at intervals descending on the easy inclinations of a hill, but still embowered with venerable oaks. On issuing from this forest-road, the Banqueting House appears seated upon a noble elevation, at the termination of a spacious avenue. This erection is in the florid Gothic style, garnished with pinnacles. After passing a beautiful piece of water, a delightful landscape bursts upon the view. To the right rises a noble sylvan scene of great extent, hanging on inclining woods from a lofty summit to the very skirts of the vale. Rising over the woods, as a terminating object to the grand vista, appears a fine Doric stone pillar, one hundred and forty feet in height, surmounted by a colossal figure of British liberty. Turning to the left, and looking westward, you behold a broad walk or terrace, which, at the distance of a mile, leads to a handsome chapel, with a rich portico and dome. The hall is delightfully situated on the Derwent, in a retired situation, and is in that style of architecture which prevailed about the commencement of the seventeen century. Nearly the whole of the south front was rebuilt some years ago, with a strict regard to its original form, being embattled with deep bay windows, divided by stone mullions and transoms. Over the entrance porch are the royal arms of James I., and beneath those of Blakiston quartering Marley. In the interior, the old drawing-room remains entire; and the house contains some excellent pictures." Gibside and Marley Hill, the ancient estates of the Marleys, were held of the see of Durham, in the time of Bishop Bury, by homage, fealty, and suit of court, and one mark exchequer rent. They were possessed by the same family until 1538, when they passed by marriage to the Blakistons, from om it was afterwards transferred in a similar manner to the Bowes family. ry Eleanor, only daughter and heiress of George Bowes, Esq., of Streatham and Gibside, married, in 1767, John Lyon, ninth earl of Strathmore, o, after his marriage, assumed the surname of Bowes. The earl died in 76; and his lady subsequently married the notorious Andrew Robinson ney, Esq., who also assumed the name of Bowes.* The latter died in 10, and on the 16th March, 1831, the Countess of Strathmore was married to William Hutt, Esq., M.P., the present occupier of Gibside.

Marley Hill is a hamlet in this township, five-and-three-quarter miles uth-west of Newcastle, where there are extensive collieries and coke ovens, the occupancy of John Bowes, Esq., and Partners. Here is a Methodist chapel and School, erected in 1840. Marley Hill was held by a family bearing the local name till about 1539, when it passed by marriage to the Lakistons.

Sunnyside is another hamlet in this township, five miles south-west of Newcastle. Here is a chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. Mary.

Lowside township includes the country on the west of the Team to the orders of Lamesley chapelry, and also Dunston Hill. Its rateable value, creage, &c., are included in the parish returns. Its population in 1801 was returned with the other townships of the parish; in 1811, it was 1,094; in 1821, 1,150; in 1831, 1,184; in 1841, 1,192; and in 1851, 1,618 souls. This increase is attributed to the opening of a new colliery and other works. The Dunston Lodge Lunatic Asylum, containing eighty-four persons in 1841, and 157 in 1851, is in this township. Here is situated the pleasant villa and nanor of Farnacres, which anciently gave name to a resident family, and was, n Bishop Hatfield's time, held by Robert de Umfraville, who, in 1428, obtained license to found a chantry in a chapel here, to which the hospital of Frereside was annexed in 1439. After the suppression of the religious houses, Farnacres was annexed by purchase to the Ravensworth estate, to which it still belongs.

Dunston is a village in this township, situated on the river Team, two miles west of Gateshead, where there are several coal-staiths, belonging to different collieries. Here are chapels belonging to the Primitive, Wesleyan, and New Connexion Methodists. There is also a National School, and a Mechanics' Institute. At Dunston Hill, a little to the south of the village, is Carr Villa, the seat of Cuthbert Carr, Esq., which commands a fine view of Newcastle and the adjacent country. Dunston Lodge, situated near the river, now serves as a lunatic asylum, and is under the management of Mr. Cornelius Garbutt.

SWALWELL township is situated near the junction of the Tyne and Derwent; and was formerly held by a family bearing the local name, who continued its possessors until about the year 1412, when it passed to the Thorntons, and afterwards to the Lumleys. The number of its inhabitants in 1081 was included in the parish returns; in 1811, it was 1,393; in 1821, 1,320; in 1831, 1,372; in 1841, 1,611; and in 1851, 1,429. This decrease of population is ascribed to the closing of the large iron-works which formerly existed here.

The Village of Swalwell is about four miles west-by-south of Gateshead, and possesses chapels belonging to the Presbyterians, Primitive, Wesleyan, and Wesleyan New Connexion Methodists, and Wesleyan Methodist Reformers; a Charity School, and a Mechanics' Institute and Library. There is a good bridge, of three arches, over the Derwent, near Swalwell.

WHICKHAM township contained in 1811, 758 inhabitants; in 1891, 765 in 1831, 878; in 1841, 929; and in 1851, 910. Its acreage, rateable value and population in 1801 are included in the parish returns. The manor of Whickham, according to Boldon Book, was held by the Bishop of Durham who had here thirty-five villain tenants, each of whom held an ox-gang of land, consisting of fifteen acres at sixteenpence rent, exclusive of services which were severe. Each villain wrought for the lord three days each week in the year, besides the labour of harvest and ploughing; they were bound to erect a cottage; and carry and fetch from Bedlington the bishop's baggage, &c., when required. They also paid 9s. cornage rent, and provided a milk cow for the lord, and for every ox-gang of land they found a hen and ten eggs and served in the lord's fishery in the Tyne. The head-boroughman had twenty-four acres of land allotted to him in recompense for the duties of his office. The punder had land assigned him, besides an acknowledgment from every tillage farm by the threave; and he provided the bishop with 40 hens and 300 eggs. In Bishop Hatfield's Survey, the tenures and services are detailed at great length. The tenants are divided into bond and free; but the actual services were converted into money rents; whilst the service of villinage was changing into the mild tenure of "at the will of the lord by copy of court-roll;" and the manor of Whickham still continues to be held under the Bishop of Durham, either by lease or by copy of court-roll. A court-leet is held in the village every alternate year, in the month of October. The North Fields of Whickham were divided in 1667, pursuant to an agreement amongst the proprietors, for quieting whose claims an injunction was issued from the Court of Chancery, at Durham, under which the highways were set out, and ordered to be repaired by the parishioners.

The Village of Whickham, which is situated about four miles west-south-west of Gateshead, is well built; and some of the houses stand on the brink of a steep descent, which commands a beautiful prospect of the vale of the Tyne from Newburn to Newcastle. Near the village is a stratum of burnt earth, consisting chiefly of clay and stone, which tradition says was caused by the English army setting fire to their tents previous to their hasty retreat when the Scottish forces crossed the Tyne from Newburn in 1640. The burning camp communicated with a seam of coal, which is said to have burnt for many years with great fury; the calcined stones and earth are now made useful in forming garden-walks, &c. Cromwell's army, or some considerable portion of it, lay here on their march to Scotland in 1648.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary, still retains many evidences of its antiquity, but possesses few pretensions to architectural elegance. It consists of nave, aisles, chancel, and western tower, and contains a few mural monuments. The churchyard, which is very spacious, was enlarged in 1812, when an acre of ground was added to it. The parish register commences in 1673. The living is a rectory, valued in the Liber Regis at £20 8s. 11½d.; gross income, £208. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, the Rev. Henry B. Carr, M.A.; curate, Rev. Richard Skinner.

The Rectory House stands at some distance from the church; the glebe consists of the garden, orchard, and about forty-five acres of land.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have places of worship here.

The Parish School was originally founded by the Rev. Robert Thomlinson D.D., about the year 1714, who applied to this purpose a legacy of £100, left by Jane Blackiston, for teaching poor children of the parish; and who also himself, by his will, bearing date 18th November, 1746, left the school and elling-house for the master, with certain galleries and pews in the parish church of Whickham, and also the sum of £100 in addition to the like sum ven by Mrs. Blackiston, to the archdeacon of Northumberland, the vicar of ewcastle, and the librarian of the testator's library in Newcastle. The pews and galleries are now let at £11 or £12 per annum. The two sums of £100 each were laid out in 1751, in the purchase of £200 South Sea Annuities, now producing £6; and an allotment of three-quarters of an acre set out to the school, is let for £1 per annum. From these sources the whole of the permanent income of the school is now derived, amounting to about £19 per annum. In the year 1825 the national system was adopted in the school, and a house for the mistress was built by private subscription. The establishment is now supported partly by the income above mentioned, but principally by voluntary contributions; and is under the management of a committee of subscribers, who act with the trustees under Dr. Thomlinson's will. The school contains two apartments, each of which possess sufficient accommodation for 120 children, 36 of whom receive a gratuitous education. John Johnstone Robinson and Elizabeth Crozier, teachers.

A Library was established here in 1854, which now contains about 200 volumes. J. J. Robinson, librarian.

Charities.—John Hewett, who died 3rd December, 1738, bequeathed £100, the interest of which was to be distributed yearly on Easter Tuesday, or as soon after as convenient, in the following manner, viz:—£30 to be laid out in Bibles, Common Prayer Books, &c., to be given to such of the charity scholars of Whickham as should best deserve the same, as a reward for their diligence, and the remainder towards binding out yearly one or more boys apprentices out of the charity school at Whickham. Of late years £1 per annum has been brought to the account of this charity from Marshall's Charity, hereafter mentioned.—By the will of Robert Marshall, the sum of £20 was bequeathed to the churchwardens and overseers of Whickham, to be placed out at interest, and the produce applied to the clothing of one of the poorest boys in the Whickham Charity School. On account of this charity £1 per annum is added to the produce of Hewett's Charity, as above mentioned.—Ralph Harrison, by will, 26th March, 1687, left £100 to the poor of this parish.—Lady Clavering, 18th May, 1726, gave £100 to the poor of Whickham, to which Thomas Bowes, Esq., added £20 more. The latter bequest is lost. The two former produce £10 per annum, which is added to the produce of Bishop Wood's Charity, hereafter mentioned; and the whole amount, £18 11s. 3d., is divided amongst the four quarters of the parish, according to the number of applicants in each.—Thomas Wood, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, in 1690, left £100 to the town of Whickham, in addition to £100 previously given by him to the said place. The interest is applied as above mentioned.—Sir James Clavering, by will, December 6th, 1697, left a rent charge out of his messuage and lands at Crook Bank; out of which £12 he appointed there should be distributed every Sunday morning, after service in Whickham Church, by the overseers, twenty-four penny loaves of wheaten bread, to twenty-four poor people of the said parish; and that twenty-four coats, petticoats, and waistcoats of grey russet, should be yearly given to twenty-four poor men, women, or children, born and living within the parish of Whickham, on St. Andrew's Day.—On a table of benefactions in the church it is stated that Sir John Clavering, Bart., left to the poor of this parish £50. Nothing is now known of this bequest.—The late Sir Thomas Clavering, Bart., in 1664, left £100 in trust of the rector, for the use of the poor, or the schools of Lanchester and Winlaton respectively. There are also charities which are applied to the repairs of the church, and seven charities are returned as lost.

POST OFFICE, WHICKHAM.—Letters arrive here from Gateshead at 9 15 a.m., and are despatched thereto at 8 20 p.m.

WINLATON PARISH.

This parish, comprising the townships of Chopwell and Winlaton, was formed from the parish of Ryton, by an order in council, dated November 6th, 1832, and created a separate and distinct parish.

CHOPWELL township comprises an area of 3,150 acres, and its rateable value is £2,540. Its population in 1801 was 346; in 1811, 291; in 1821, 237; in 1831, 254; in 1841, 320; and in 1851, 458 souls. This township anciently comprised the south-western angle of the parish of Ryton; but the estate has now been divided into several distinct portions. Chopwell was a part of the property of Newminster Abbey; and Surtees conjectures that the Swinburnes, who were already tenants of Chopwell under the abbey, obtained at the dissolution the fee simple of the crown or its grantees. It continued in the possession of the Swinburne family till the time of the Northern Rebellion, when John Swinburne, being implicated in that unfortunate affair, was obliged to quit England; and his estates were seized upon by the crown. The manor of Chopwell was subsequently granted by Queen Elizabeth to Sir Robert Constable, from whose family it was purchased by the Archers. It afterwards became the property of the Dudleys and Claverings, from the latter of whom it passed by marriage to William Earl Cowper, who sold Chopwell Hall, Horsgate, and Broomfield House to Dr. Thorpe, rector of Ryton, and to his son, Robert Thorpe, Esq. The present landowners are the Marquis of Bute (who is also the principal owner of the royalties), Robert Surtees, Esq., Aubone Surtees, Esq., John Cookson, Esq., Archdeacon Thorp, Mr. James Fewster, Mr. William Cochrane Carr, Mr. Thomas E. Ward, Mr. Mark Snowden, the executors of Thomas Thorp, Esq., Mr. James Annandale, Mrs. Herdman, and others. There are some extensive plantations in this township, which are held by government. Almonside, Hukergate, and Blackhall, are the names of estates in this township.

The Hamlet of Chopwell is about 11 miles west-south-west of Newcastle. Here is a chapel-of-ease to Winlaton, in which the minister of the parish church officiates on Sundays. Lead Gate, High Spen, and Horse Gate, are also hamlets in this township.

Gainsfield Colliery, situated at High Spen, is the property of the Marquis of Bute, and affords employment to a considerable number of men and boys. Mr. John Gray, of Gainsfield House, is viewer and manager.

WINLATON township contains 5,111 acres, and its rateable value is £10,901. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 3,021; in 1811, 3,063; in 1821, 3,532; in 1831, 3,951; in 1841, 5,006; and in 1851, 5,627. The principal landowners are Charles Towneley, Esq., Sir William Clavering, Bart., the Marquis of Bute, Lord Ravensworth, Joseph Cowen, Esq., and John Bowes, Esq., the last four of whom also exercise the manorial rights and privileges. In Boldon Book, Wynlakton and Berley are described as being on lease with the demesne and villain service, and with the farm stock, under £15 rent. Besides, the tenants in villinage mowed the lord's meadows, and they received their corrody, and won and led the hay. The marsh, the meadow, and the wood, were reserved to the lord. The mill paid five marks-and-a-half. In 1368, Sir Ralph Neville died seized of the manor, which was then held by twenty marks exchequer rent. Winlaton continued in the Neville family till the reign of Elizabeth, when, just before the forfeiture, Charles Earl of Westmoreland, on the 19th July, 1569, conveyed it for £2,000, to Richard Hodgson and William Selby, who held it in equal moieties. The families of Selby and Hodgson held Winlaton for several generations, but it is now possessed by the proprietors above mentioned. This township contains extensive iron works, in which anchors, even of the largest size, anvils, chain cables, cylinders, edge tools, nail-rods, files, &c., are manufactured; collieries, engine building establishments, fire-brick and gas retort manufactories, saw mills, &c.

The Village of Winlaton occupies an elevated situation, on the west side of the Derwent, about six miles west of Newcastle. About the year 1690, Sir Ambrose Crowley removed his iron works from Sunderland to this place, which then consisted of only a few cottages. In the following year, Win- an iron mill was converted into an iron forge, and the works were quickly extended to Swalwell and other places in the vicinity. In 1705, a chapel, capable of holding 300 persons, was built at Winlaton, for the use of the workmen; schools too were established, and a code of laws drawn up, which a great measure superseded the laws of the land, and became locally established. Sir John Anvil, in the Spectator, No. 299, is said to be Sir Ambrose Crowley. The principal manufacturers here still retain the name Crowley (Crowley, Millington, and Co.), and employ a considerable number of workmen.

The Church, dedicated to St. Paul, is an elegant Gothic structure, erected in 1828, at a cost of £2,500, from a design by Ignatius Bonomi, Esq. It comprises nave, aisles, chancel, south porch, and square tower, the latter of which is surmounted by four pinnacles; and contains 800 sittings, 400 of which are reserved and unappropriated. The tower contains a peal of five bells, and there is an excellent organ in the west gallery. The interior of the church is very bright, and the softened light which streams through its richly stained windows adds much to the general impressiveness of its appearance. The chancel window is occupied by figures of the Redeemer, the four Evangelists, and angels bearing scrolls; the other windows are filled with suitable representations of Scripture subjects. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, of the yearly value of £356. Rector, Rev. Henry Wardell, M.A.; curate, Rev. H. J. Wardell, B.A.

The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Primitive Methodists, and Presbyterians, have places of worship here.

St. Paul's National School is a stone building, formerly used as a church-chapel for Winlaton, and is attended by about eighty children of both sexes. It is under government inspection, and is conducted by Mr. Whitfield Comilly.

Winlaton Mechanics' Institute and Reading Room was established on the 14th September, 1847, and now numbers about forty members; the library contains about 130 volumes. John M'Olvin, secretary. There is also a Subscription Library, containing upwards of 1,000 volumes in the various departments of literature, which is well supported. John Burrell, librarian.

Axwell is a manor in this township, which, in 1362, was held of the fee of Durham by William de Birtley. At the time of Hatfield's Survey it was held by the heirs of Hugh del Redheugh, by knight's service and a payment of 15s. 4d. It was afterwards held by the Thornton family, from whom it was transferred by marriage to the Lumleys, coming subsequently to the Dingles and Clavering, with the latter of whom it still remains. Serlo de Burgh, the ancestor of the Claverings, came into England with the Conqueror, and Edward I. conferred upon his descendants the name of Clavering, from their barony in Essex. They first settled here in the reign of Elizabeth. Axwell Park, the modern seat of the Claverings, is situated north of the Derwent. The house was erected by the late Sir Thomas Clavering, from a design by Payne, and is considered to be one of the happiest efforts of that architect. It is pleasantly situated on an eminence, and commands beautiful and interesting views of the woods of Gibside and the vale of the Tyne. The present resident is Joseph Lamb, Esq.

Barlow, formerly Berley, is a hamlet, in this township, seven miles west by south of Newcastle, where there is a Methodist Chapel and an endowed school, which is attended by about seventy children.

Derwenthaugh, a hamlet, in Stella parish, but in Winlaton township, is situated on the bank of the Tyne, about four miles west of Newcastle, where there are a number of coke ovens, belonging to the Marquis of Bute, and a large fire brick manufactory and coke ovens, belonging to George Heppell Ramsay, Esq. Charles Nesbit, a celebrated wood engraver, of the last century, was a native of this place.

Winstan Mill, another hamlet, in this township, five-and-a-half miles south-west of Newcastle, is principally inhabited by the workmen in the adjacent iron works.

GENERAL HISTORY

AND

This ancient and interesting town—the last great centre of enterprise towards the northern margin of England—is situated on the left bank of the Tyne, opposite to Gateshead, which bears a similar relation to Newcastle as Southwark does to London, or Salford to Manchester, 15 miles north-west of Durham, 56 east of Carlisle, 76 north-west by west of York, 117 south-east of Edinburgh, and 273 north-west of London. Its population in 1801 was 33,048; in 1811, 32,537; in 1821, 41,794; in 1831, 53,613; in 1841, 70,337; and in 1851, it had increased to 87,748 souls. At the latter period, it contained 10,441 inhabited houses, 311 uninhabited, and 163 in process of erection. The town occupies the steep slopes, which, rising from the banks of the Tyne, stretch away into suburbs that have little need of distance to lend them charms. The lower portion of Newcastle, next the river, has crept along, east and west, year after year, until it now extends almost three miles in length; while on the edge of the stream are closely crowded warehouses and workshops, with thronged approaches to the ships and barges, which make another town upon the river. There is, perhaps, no town in England whose present state and appearance are more in contrast with its earlier condition and character than Newcastle, which owes its origin to war, its establishment to the spirit of religion, and its increase to the spirit of commerce. Its old castle and churches indicate its connection with antiquity, while its ranges of houses and shops, such as no other town in England can excel, and few can equal, prove the spirit of modern activity which animates its people.

One of the strangest things in connection with Newcastle, and one which most particularly arrests the attention of the stranger, is the absence of any main line of thoroughfare in continuation of the bridge, which connects Newcastle and Gateshead. The visitor sees before him a steep, absolutely insurmountable by streets or vehicles of any kind. This was the portion first built upon, and it subsequently became a dense mass of courts and alleys—"a vast hanging field," as it has been called by one topographer, "of sombre and cheerless houses, huddled mobbishly into a confused and pent-up mass, packed and squeezed by mutual pressure into panic retreat from the approach of wheeled carriages." In the absence of streets, the only manner in which the upper part of the town can be reached, is by means of interminable flights of steps, which seem to climb the face of the hill. In order, therefore, to surmount this ascent, a detour to the east is necessary. Passing on a little in this direction, we arrive at an open space of ground, called the Sandhill, where the Exchange is situated. The houses in this neighbourhood are many of them highly picturesque, having survived the many changes which have occurred since the days of the half-timbered and carved-gable houses. Turning out of the Sandhill at its northern extremity, we come to the Side, a street running in a north-westerly direction, and whose house-architecture is rather remarkable. On reaching the head of the Side, we soon emerge into the open space which contains St. Nicholas's Church. But it is in going along the river's bank to the east, that we become immersed amongst the oldest, densest, and dirtiest part of the town, where ships and coals leave their commercial impress on the houses of the Quayside. The long roadway upon which we walk, presents us with the river and its shipping upon our right hand, and the Custom House, warehouses, and offices, on our left. No good streets are to be found here; but we may see a great number of steep alleys, called charres, by means of which we can arrive at Butcher Bank and Dog Bank, in the former of which Aken-side, the author of "The Pleasures of Imagination," resided. Passing beyond the Quayside, we come to another densely-built parallelogram of streets and houses, having for its boundaries the new road to Shields and the New Quay; parallel, and between these two is Sandgate, a narrow lane, and one of the oldest entrances into Newcastle from the east.

Previous to the construction of Grey-street, Pilgrim-street was the main highway through Newcastle; and its name is said to have been derived from the number of pilgrims, who, in ancient times, passed along it on their way to the Shrine at Jesus's Mount, now Jesmond, in the north-east vicinity of the town. Our northern margin brings us up to the open country, where Jesmond, with its beautiful cemetery, the extensive Town Moor, the Castle Leazes, the Nuns' Moor, the Westgate Cemetery, and the numerous streets of well-built private houses, and the churches and chapels all erected within the last few years, all tend to show that it is in this direction we must principally look for the private residences of the principal inhabitants of Newcastle. To the west and south-west of the centre of the town, we find more buildings connected with the early history of Newcastle than in any other quarter. As in the eastern division, we will begin at the river, and ascend to the higher parts of the town. First, then, for the C'lose which runs from Sandhill to the Forth Bank. It is a narrow street crowded with all kinds of manufactories, warehouses, and wharfs. Yet this street was formerly the dwelling place of the leading inhabitants of the town, among whom were the Earl of Northumberland and Sir William Blackett. One of the large buildings on the south side, now occupied as a warehouse, was for many generations the Mansion House, in which civic festivities ran their career of glory. Immediately north of the Close, and forming the most conspicuous objects from the two bridges, are the Castle and the County Courts, crowning the summit of the ascent. The two buildings are very near each other, and the open space of ground between and around them is called the Castle Garth. The County Court comprises the Moot Hall for Northumberland, where the assizes are held. It is a fine commodious building, erected about forty years ago, on the site of a Roman station. Not far from the castle is St. Nicholas's Church, by far the most remarkable in Newcastle. If there were nothing else about it to attract attention, its delicately supported spire, would be an object of interest, but in addition to this it has the claims of antiquity in its favour. This church lies at the southern extremity of a wide line of street, which probably formed, at one period, the main thoroughfare of the town, and the names of Groat Market, Cloth Market, and Bigg Market, applied to different portions of its length, seem to indicate that the markets of Newcastle were once held here. To the west of the castle lies an irregular mass of streets, occupied partly by factories, and partly by poor dwellings. Nothing picturesque need be looked for, until we pass the Forth Field and Forth Bank, which, in the middle of the last century, were the principal promenades of ewcastle. But brick and stone, population and industry, have, by little and little, crept up and over the Forth, until scarcely a vestige of it now remains. One portion of it has been converted into a Cattle Market; the Infirmary is situated upon another; while a third has been swallowed up by the Central railway Station.

"Newcastle," says a writer in 'The Land We Live in,' "owes no small share of the beauty which marks some of its streets, to one single individual, possessing a bold original mind, which could think and plan for itself, and conquer, one by one, the difficulties which would have crushed a less vigorous man. If we were to regard this as a matter simply of pounds, shillings, and pence, we would have to place it on a lower level than many a building enterprise: it is not every one that, in enriching his native town, can also enrich himself,—the town retains the adornment for ages, whether the author of it dies a rich or a poor man. Let us see what has been done by Mr. Grainger, and how it has been done, at Newcastle. It is necessary to know that the town was at the early part of the present century, before we can form an estimate of the amount of boldness, courage, and perseverance necessary to work out the subsequent changes. In bygone ages the Franciscan convent and the nunnery were surrounded by twelve acres of ground, in the heart of the town—but these were, in latter days, replaced by an old mansion, the temporary prison of Charles I., with its gardens and plantations. Down to Grainger's time this garden and plantation remained,—unproductive, on account of the smoke which for so many ages has enveloped the town, and useless to the town in many other ways. He watched the ill-ordered empty space with a longing eye, he thought of the excellent building-stone in the quarries near at hand, he built up in his mind imaginary terraces, and squares, and sumptuous streets, and resolved to bide his time.

"Mr. Grainger entered upon various works, as a builder, for other parties, and, in the course of a few years, built many portions of new streets, such as Barliol, Blackett, and New Bridge streets. Then came the rather ambitious project of Eldon Square, with its handsome rows of stone-fronted houses. Every enterprise successfully brought to completion, acted as a stepping-stone to something higher. Grainger had advanced greatly and rapidly, and he next conceived the plan of building about a hundred and thirty stone-fronted houses, of a more ornamental character than any yet seen in the town, in the northern part of Newcastle, near the Town Moor; the plan was fully carried out, and the town has unquestionably gained a great ornament by it. His next enterprise was the erection of a building which, under the name of the Arcade, and opening into Pilgrim-street, presents to view a fine stone front, extending nearly a hundred feet in length, and an interior extending two hundred feet in depth. The whole building affords offices for two Banking-houses, Post-office, Stamp-office, Excise and Permit-office, and other establishments.

"Up to this date, say about the year 1832, Mr. Grainger's operations within the town had given new buildings to the value of £200,000, nearly all of them stone-fronted, and far above the standard of street-architecture in other towns. But his great work, the development of his vast schemes, was yet to come. The twelve acres of unemployed, or ill-employed, vacant ground in the heart of the town, on which his thoughts had been centred for many a year, at length came into possession of Mr. Grainger, at a purchase price of £50,000, and about the same time he appropriated another sum, of nearly equal amount, to the purchase of some old property in the immediate vicinity.

What was to come out of this, nobody knew but himself, the plans were wholly developed in his own mind before his fellow-townsmen knew anything concerning them. Something notable was expected, but this something was vague and conjectural. The first feature was the construction of a fine central street in continuation of Dean-street. No ram's horn, however proverbially crooked, can be more tortuous than the entrance into Newcastle from the old bridge, and it was to lessen this crookedness, on approaching the heart of the town, that the new street was planned. A butcher-market and a theatre stood in the way of the improvement, but the improver was not to be deterred by such obstacles. The Corporation gave up the old market, and agreed to the plan for a new one, and on the price to be paid for effecting the change. Works were commenced immediately, and in October, 1835, was opened the finest market in the kingdom, nay, it is even said to be the finest in Europe. The theatre was the next point—a few difficulties arose in this matter, but the theatre was a neat and convenient one, but Mr. Grainger cut the matter short by offering to build a new and handsomer one, and to present a good round sum of money into the bargain; this was accepted, and the theatre was built. In all these matters, and others of a similar kind, Mr. Grainger's promptness became conspicuous, and the townsmen began to look for something bold and decisive whenever he took a matter in hand. When the whole of the property for the new central street was purchased, then arose Grainger's greatest mechanical difficulties—the levelling of the ground. Such was the alternation of hill and hollow, that the formation of a fine and regular street in the planned direction struck many with amazement and many more with doubt. In some parts the ground had to be excavated to a depth of 25 feet, to form the basement of houses—in other parts valleys had to be filled to a height of 35 feet, and houses to be built thereupon, in order to form a street of uniform level. There were instances in which more was built under ground than appeared in the whole elevation of the line above. The lowering of hillocks and ridges was so much more considerable than the filling up of hollows and trenches, that nearly a million cubic feet of earth were carried away from time to time, during the progress of the various improvements, after filling up the valleys, and mortar with some of the sand, and making bricks with some of the clay.

"This arduous but most necessary operation of levelling being completed, there arose, one by one, those splendid streets, which have no parallel in England. Instances may be met with, in some of our larger towns, of isolated portions of street equal to these in beauty, but it may be doubted whether, as a group, these creations of Grainger's are equalled. Edinburgh could do more than either London or Liverpool in producing a parallel. The builder was, for the most part, his own architect, and as his new streets are mainly streets of shops, he was not bound down by precedent to such a degree as to cramp his invention. Grey-street, Grainger-street, Market-street, Clayton-street West, Nun-street, Nelson-street, Wood-street, Shakespeare-street, rose in succession—all situated in the very heart of the town, all occupied by houses presenting fronts of dressed and polished stone, altogether presenting a length of a mile and a quarter of street from fifty to eighty feet wide, and all erected in about five years. It is not merely a list of new streets thus presented by the improvements, but public buildings of a notable character have been reared as parts of the general design. Thus, there are the new Market, the new Central Exchange, the new Theatre, the new Dispensary, the new Music Hall, the new Levee

m, two new Chapels, the Incorporated Companies' Hall, two auction-rooms, ten inns, and twelve public-houses,—besides about forty private-houses, the three or four hundred shops which form the leading idea of the town. It has been estimated that the total value of the buildings thus planned and constructed by one man, in five years, at a fair rental, is about a million sterling, and that about two thousand persons were regularly engaged on them for many years. Let us now, shortly, see what are the arrangements which this new world of buildings present. First for the Market. It is a sumptuous building occupies an oblong parallelogram, bounded by Grainger, Clayton, Nelson, and Nun-streets, and having twelve openings to these streets from its interior area. It lies in the very heart of Mr. Grainger's scheme of improvements, and is worthy of them. The market is about three hundred and forty feet long by two hundred and fifty wide, covering an area more than nine thousand square yards, or nearly two acres. Neither London, Birkenhead, Birmingham, nor Liverpool, can present such an area covered market as this. The area is divided into a number of avenues, or piazzas, appropriated as meat, vegetable, poultry, and butter markets. The Meat Market consists of four long avenues, crossed by four shorter ones, mostly with arched ceilings, and well ventilated. The Vegetable Market is a noble apartment, larger than Westminster Hall, having a carved oak ceiling, supported by two rows of iron pillars, and a lantern-light running along the centre. The length is 318 feet, the width 57, and the height 40—and the whole appearance is so far beyond the general characteristics of such buildings, that a local guide-book claims for it the designation of 'a gorgeous hall, of vast extent, rather resembling the nave of some mighty cathedral than a market for the sale of the fruits of the earth.' Without soaring to so lofty a height as this, we can well imagine how Newcastle may well be proud of such a market—and of the mind that planned it.

"But Grey-street is the great work. This street is, by the crossing of her smaller streets, divided into sections, each of which is made to comprise distinct architectural design, worthy of study, independent of the rest. All, however, agree in this—that the front and entire decorations of the houses are of solid stone; that the stone is of a warm, rich colour—that the ranges excel those of Edinburgh, in being more ornate—and that they excel those of Regent-street, in London, as truly as good stone excels shabby stucco. Taking the west side of Grey-street, we find it divided into three compartments by the crossing of High Bridge and Market-streets. The south compartment comprises a Corinthian design in the centre, with two wings, derived, in many of its details, from the interior of the Pantheon, at Rome. The entablature of the centre front rests on eleven lofty Corinthian columns, and the whole is surmounted by a double range of balustrades. This central portion is occupied by the offices of two banking companies. The next group, the north compartment, about half the length of the southern, presents an Ionic design, after the temple of the Ilyssus at Athens—the middle portion is occupied by a large inn. The northern compartment, the shortest of the three, comprises one side of a triangle of houses, the area of which triangle is occupied by the Central Exchange. This spot is, perhaps, the most central and the most magnificent in the whole group of new buildings. The Exchange is a rich and beautiful semicircular building, imbedded in a triangle of noble houses, whose fronts are in Grey-street, Grainger-street, and Market-street. Seven entrances lead from these streets to the Exchange. It is a semicircle, about a hundred and fifty feet long by a hundred in width, wholly lighted from above, as the building is encased in a triangle of houses. The roof is supported by fourteen Ionic columns, twelve of which form a semicircle, and within the columned area of this semicircle is the News room—on the outside of the semicircle are the corridors, entrances, and staircases leading to the Office-room and other apartments. Above the entablature, round the top of the semicircle, spring a series of curved ribs, one over each column, and these ribs form the skeleton for a magnificent glass dome, through which descends ample light into the area of the room. In an upper part of the building are apartments for the School of Design. The triangle of houses, within which the Exchange is thus singularly placed, are of uniform design—the front presented towards the three streets are each an adaptation of the design of the Corinthian Temple of Vesta, at Tivoli—and the three points of the triangle are each finished by a dome springing from a nearly circular range of Corinthian columns.

"Next taking a glance at the east side of Grey-street, we find the entire length distributed into five architectural compartments, separated by the crossing of other streets. The first or southern compartment, from Market-street to Shakspeare-street, has in the centre a colonnade of lofty Corinthian columns, with wings having pilasters and balustrades. The second compartment, from Shakspeare-street to Market-street, is almost wholly occupied by the front of the new theatre. This theatre is one of the largest and most beautiful out of London; as the portico projects completely over the foot pavement, and is formed wholly of highly enriched stone-work, it constitutes one of the great ornaments of Grey-street. Continuing our route up this street, we come to the third architectural compartment, lying between Market-street and Hood-street. Here, according to Mr. Grainger's original plan, would have been a splendid range of buildings, occupied by the Town and County Courts, Council Chamber, Town Clerk's and other corporate offices and chambers, and a residence for the mayor; but difficulties interfered with the carrying out of the plan, and Mr. Grainger has made a portion of his architectural design available for other purposes. The centre of this compartment, as now completed, is occupied by a banking company; it presents a highly enriched facade in the upper storeys, supported by more sober Doric pilasters beneath. The fourth compartment, occupying the space between Hood-street and High Friar Lane, is of the Ionic order, with recessed columns in the centre, and pilastered wings. The fifth and last compartment, ending at Blackett-street, is more simple than all the others. Such then is Grey-street; and this detailed view of its architectural features will serve as a general representative of all Mr. Grainger's beautiful streets. A somewhat less ornate version of this magnificent street will serve to describe each of the others. At the point where three of them meet, at the top of Grey-street, is Bailey's statue of Earl Grey, on a lofty column."

EARLY HISTORY.—It is now agreed by antiquarians, that Newcastle occupies the site of the Roman station Pons Ælii, but of its history during the time this country was under the imperial dominion, nothing is known with any degree of certainty. Subsequent to the withdrawal of the Roman legions, and during the Saxon period, it was known by the name of Monkchester, which originated in the number of religious establishments that were situated in the town and neighbourhood. These, however, disappeared during the Danish invasions, and at the commencement of the Norman period, religious institutions of every kind had almost totally disappeared from Northumbria. The Conqueror had scarcely established himself in his newly acquired dominions ore Monkchester experienced his severity. Malcolm, King of Scotland, and earl the Etheling, having invaded England, were met and totally defeated William on Gateshead Fell; and, in order that they might not find an asylum in the town, he caused Monkchester to be almost entirely demolished. It was not long before Malcolm was again in arms and renewed his ravages in Northumberland. The Conqueror sent Robert, his eldest son, to chastise the perfidy of the Scot, but the two princes did not meet, and the only result of the expedition was the erection of a fortress at Monkchester, which henceforth bore the name of Newcastle. As this stronghold protected the passage of the Tyne at this point, it has always been a place of great importance, and, with the completion of the castle and fortifications, the town rapidly increased in size and population, receiving many immunities from William and his successors. So early as the reign of Rufus, it was completely enclosed with a wall and fosse, and endowed with all the privileges of a free borough. As the castle was erected by one son of the Conqueror, it is a singular circumstance, that another son was the first to employ force against it. In 1095, it was seized by the adherents of Robert Mowbray, Earl of Northumberland, and did not surrender to Rufus until after a short siege, when several of the earl's followers fell into the hands of the monarch.

Nothing of any importance transpired in Newcastle till the reign of Stephen, when we find it occupied by David, the Scottish King, who had married across the borders, reduced Carlisle, Norham, Alnwick, and Newcastle, and made war upon Stephen in support of the Empress Matilda, his niece, by whose desire a treaty of peace was concluded in 1139. By the terms of this treaty it was agreed that the town should remain in the hands of the Scots, who held it for sixteen years, after which period it was restored to the English crown.

William the Lion, King of Scotland, having joined the league against Henry II., burst into England in 1174, bringing ruin and desolation wherever he appeared, but while tilting in careless security in the neighbourhood of Alnwick, he was surprised and made prisoner, with many of his principal officers. He was afterwards ransomed, and on his return to Scotland, a serious conflict took place on Tyne Bridge between the inhabitants of Newcastle and the royal attendants. Enraged at seeing their old enemy once more at liberty, the people attacked the royal cortege, and William was obliged to cut his way through the exasperated masses by which he was surrounded. Sir John Perth and others of the royal escort were slain in the fray. Newcastle was several times visited by King John, who seems to have had a great predilection for the old town. He repaired and strengthened the fortifications of the castle, and instituted a Society of Free Merchants, the members of which were exempted by him from pleading anywhere beyond the walls of the town, to any plea, save that of foreign tenures—he also released them from the duties of toll, lastage, pontage, and passage, in all the seaports of his dominions both at home and abroad, empowering the Mayor of Newcastle, or Sheriff of Northumberland, to give them reparation for any injury they might sustain. The succeeding sovereigns, Henry III., Edward II., and Edward III. confirmed this charter and added to it new privileges. In 1235, Henry III. granted a special charter to the men of this town, by which all Jews were prohibited from residing in it, and in 1238, he gave the townsmen the lands called "the Forth and the Castle Field," with permission to dig coals there. About this period, Newcastle suffered severely from pestilence and famine, to which great numbers of the inhabitants fell victims.

In consequence of a dispute about the possession of the northern counties Alexander of Scotland and Henry III. of England met in Newcastle, where a conference was held in 1236. The dispute not having been settled, an English army assembled here in 1241, but hostilities were prevented by the mediation of the Archbishop of York. Shortly afterwards the town suffered severely from fire, the greater portion of the buildings, and the bridge over the Tyne being destroyed by the conflagration. We find Edward I. in 1296, when, in consequence of the manner in which Englishmen had been treated at the Scottish court, Edward summoned Baliol to meet him at Newcastle, on the first of March, on which day the English king arrived accompanied by an army of 30,000 foot and 4,000 horse. Having waited some time for Baliol's appearance, Edward advanced with his army to Berwick, where he also delayed and repeated his summons. The destruction of a Scottish detachment, in attempting to surprise the Castle of Wark, was the signal for war. While the town of Berwick was stormed by the English, Corbridge and Hexham were destroyed by the Scots. Edward, however, was not to be deterred from his plan, but pushing forward the war with vigour in the short period of two months, captured all the principal strongholds in Scotland. This was followed by the submission of Baliol, who did homage to the King of England at Berwick. The following year, Wallace, the Scottish leader, entered Northumberland, ravaging and laying waste the country to the very walls of Newcastle, but when he came near the town, finding that the inhabitants had made all necessary preparations for defence, he changed his route and shortly afterwards returned to Scotland. After the death of Wallace, the cause of Scottish independence was espoused by Bruce, who defeated the English in several encounters. Edward I. determined to reduce the Scots to obedience, collected a large army at Newcastle, and advanced into Scotland, where he was totally defeated at the Battle of Bannockburn.

Subsequent to the events above narrated, the inhabitants of Newcastle suffered severely from famine and pestilence, and their misery was so great that they were compelled to eat horses and dogs. The old historians inform us that "for very hunger the thieves in the prisons devoured the prisoners, nay, even that parents did eat their own children." These hardships were increased by an invasion of the Scots, who were so numerous in Newcastle, that, it is said, "they wist not where to lodge."

Immediately after the accession of Edward III., the dissatisfaction of some English barons, who had been deprived of their lands in Scotland, kindled a new war between the two countries. After various successes the Scots were completely overthrown at the battle of Halidon Hill, and the Scottish monarch performed homage for his crown and kingdom, in the Dominican Church at Newcastle, binding himself by oath to hold his kingdom of the King of England, for himself and successors for ever, transferring at the same time to the English monarch the five Scottish counties bordering upon England, to be annexed to that crown for ever. This state of thing did not long continue, for, the French king being defeated at Cressy, lost no time in urging David of Scotland to invade England. The Scottish monarch assembled thirty-three thousand horse, and intending to create a diversion in favour of the King of France, entered England. Passing by Hexham, he vigorously but vainly attempted to take Newcastle by storm, and marching into Durham laid the whole county waste. Thinking that the country was utterly defenceless, he talked of nothing less than marching to London, but the bishops at barons of the north had collected a small but resolute band, and went in quest of the invader. The skill of the English archers prevailed over iron and pike, the men at arms charged the Scottish host, and the infantry completed the rout. Fifteen thousand Scots lay dead, and David himself, with a flower of his nobility, remained in the hands of the conquerors. The broken shaft of Neville's Cross still marks the scene of carnage. After the battle of Poitiers the Scots ransomed their king, and concluded a peace for twelve and twenty years. Henry IV. having ascended the throne, upon the deposition and murder of the unfortunate Richard II., granted to Newcastle a charter, by which the town and its suburbs were separated from the county of Northumberland and made into a county of itself, under the title of the county of Newcastle.

Among the great days of this ancient town was that on which, in 1503, the Princess Margaret, daughter of Henry VII., passed through Newcastle on her way to Scotland, where she was to become the bride of James IV. of Scotland, who gives a detailed description of the journey of the princess, tells us that Margaret and her splendid retinue were met about three miles from Newcastle, by the Prior of Tynemouth and Sir Richard Harbottle, the former attended by thirty, and the latter by forty, richly attired horsemen. Upon entering the bridge the procession was joined by the Earl of Northumberland and his retinue, the collegiate, the Carmelite friars, the mayor, the sheriff, and the aldermen, clad in their several modes. Then, as Old Leland tells us, "at the bryge, upon the gatt, was many children, revested of surplices, singing melodiously hymnes, and playing on instruments of many sortes." Within the town all the houses of the burgesses were decorated, and the streets, house-tops, and rigging of the shipping, were filled with spectators, including gentlemen and gentlewomen in so great number that it was a pleasure for to see."

The annals of Newcastle in past ages are chiefly filled up with accounts of wranglings and fightings between the English and Scotch in times of enmity, processions and feastings in times of peace, and terrible visitations of the plague, which seems to have been more frequent here than in almost any other town in the kingdom. In 1603, King James spent four days here, on his way to London, to become crowned King of England. He was received at the gates of the town by the mayor, aldermen, and councillors, who presented the burghal keys and sword, together with a purse of gold, to his majesty, who graciously returned the former, and as graciously retained the latter. On the Sunday, the king attended divine service at the church, where the Bishop of Durham preached before him, and on the Monday he visited the whole of the town, releasing all prisoners "except for treason, murder, and papistrie." The townsmen of Newcastle were so elated at the royal visit, that "they thankfully bare all the charges of the king's household during the time of his abode with them," and, if we are to believe history, James must have been anything but displeased to let his new subjects take this honour to themselves. On the occasion of a temporary visit to Scotland, fourteen years after, James again visited Newcastle, and again was he presented with a purse of gold by the municipality.

We find Newcastle much involved in the turmoils of the civil war, and there seems to have been a strange mixture of loyalty and republicanism afloat at that period in the town and neighbourhood; for Charles I., in 1646, having fled from his enemies in the midland and southern counties, took refuge at Newcastle, and placed himself under the protection of the Scottish army, by whom he was kept in a sort of honourable confinement. Borne tells us, "that upon his majesty's entrance into Newcastle, he was crowned with bonfires and ringing of bells, drums and trumpets, and peals of ordnance, but guarded by 300 of the Scottish horse, those near him bareheaded." We are also further informed "that the king and his train had liberty every day to go and play goff, in the Shield-field, without the walls." The people, on one occasion, took a singular mode of showing their sympathy for him. "A little while after the king's coming to Newcastle," says Whitelock, "a Scotch minister preached boldly before him, and, when his sermon was done, called for the fifty-second Psalm, which begins—

Thy wicked works to praise?'

Whereupon his majesty stood up, and called for the fifty-sixth Psalm, which begins—

'Have mercy, Lord, on me, I pray,
For men would me devour.'

The people waived the minister's psalm, and sang that which the king had called for."

Charles, however, was imprudent enough to attempt an escape from Newcastle, under circumstances which presented very little prospect of success, and a consequence of his failure was, that the remainder of his residence in the town was rendered more irksome. The troops, Bourne tells us, disliked the fallen monarch:—"The king, having an antipathy against tobacco, was much disturbed by their bold and continual smoking in his presence." At length, in the next following year, the Scots gave Charles up to the English, and the unfortunate monarch was marched off to London. The history of the proceedings of Newcastle, after the termination of the civil war, settled into mere annals, disturbed only in two instances—the rebellions of 1715 and 1745—on both which occasions Newcastle appeared among the defenders of the Hanoverian line.*

EXTINCT MONASTIC EDIFICES.—The early monasteries and religious houses of Monkchester having been destroyed during the Danish invasions, were restored shortly after the Norman conquest, when a convent for Benedictine nuns was founded by Baron Hylton, of Hylton Castle, in the county of Durham. This convent, which was dedicated to St. Bartholomew, was magnificently endowed, and among its benefactors we find the names of the most eminent personages in England and Scotland. In addition to this, old Newcastle possessed a Dominican convent, a Carmelite convent, a Franciscan convent, an Augustinian convent, St. Michael's Priory, Our Lady's House, a Maison de Dieu, and five chapels, dedicated respectively to the Blessed Virgin, St. John, St. James, St. Lawrence, and St. Thomas the Martyr, all of which were swept away at the period of the dissolution of the religious houses.

FORTIFICATIONS, &c.—Among the fortifications of Newcastle, the Castle, from which the town derives its name, claims pre-eminence. This edifice, as has been previously remarked, stands in an irregular open area, called Castle Garth, north-west of the Sandhill, south of the Side, and is accessible by many crooked alleys. It was erected by Robert Curthose, the eldest son of the Conqueror, and was formerly surrounded by two strong and high walls, which enclosed an area of more than three acres. The keep covers an area 76 feet, by 60 feet, is from 14 to 17 feet thick in its walls, and its height on the surface of the ground to the top of the lowest battlement of the tower is upwards of 97 feet. A flight of nineteen steps within the inner wall which encloses the keep, conducts to an exceedingly strong portal, the entrance to the outer tower; another flight of twenty-four steps conducts to a bed-room of 13 feet by 12, the interior of which appears to have been highly embellished, and a third and short flight of eight steps leads thence, to a lofty and imposing portal, to the state apartments, which are marked by their antique grandeur. A winding staircase from the ground floor to the summit of the castle, and galleries communicating with each other, exist in the thickness of the walls. Near the grand entrance is the chapel, an apartment 46 feet wide by 20, now shorn of its beauty, but evidently once a highly-adorned Norman edifice. This castle maintained its place among the fortifications of the north till the latter part of the fifteenth century, when its process of degradation commenced. It was farmed by the Company of Tailors from 1605 to 1615. For what purpose the tailors required it does not appear to be known; but they paid for it an annual rent of one pound sterling. It was granted by James I., in 1618, to Alexander Stevenson, one of the trustees of the bedchamber, for fifty years, at a rental of forty shillings per annum. The subsequent history of the castle is anything but a feudal one, its bright days of the old structure were long departed. In 1808, it became the property of John Turner, Esq., of London, who sold it to the corporation for 900 guineas. Upon its coming into the possession of the municipality, they instantly set about its restoration, and, in 1848, they let it at a nominal rent to the Newcastle Antiquarian Society, and the two bodies have agreed to expend a certain sum on the restoration of the interior. An Antiquarian Society could hardly possess a more fitting locale.

The walls, gates, and military towers of Newcastle, aided by the Tyne on the south, and the deep glens of Ouseburn and Pandon Dean on the west, rendered this town, in Leland's time, to be regarded as one of the most strongly fortified places in Europe. But since 1745, advancing population and commerce have ground most of these fortifications to dust, yet enough still remains to show what they have been. The town wall was upwards of two miles in circuit, from twelve to twenty feet high, and eight feet thick. It was perforated by six or seven strongly embattled gates, and defended by numerous towers. All the gates were in existence about sixty or seventy years ago, and of the numerous towers, about a dozen still survive. They are repaired and kept in order, and applied to various useful purposes—very burghal and commercial, but very anti-feudal. One is the Shipwrights' Hall, one the Tanners' Hall, while the weavers, the colliers, the glaziers, the plumbers, the masons, the felt makers, the curriers, and other trades, have all succeeded in obtaining halls for their meetings, in some or other of these old towers. During the period that walls and towers were needed, the inhabitants of Newcastle were divided into twenty-four wards, or divisions, for the better defence of the town. To each of these wards a portion of the walls, and a certain number of towers were assigned, so that in the event of any attack there might be no confusion, but that each ward might march to its proper place, and there defend the town against its assailants.

CHURCHES AND CHAPELS. — All the town and county of Newcastle-upon-Tyne is included in the parish of St. Nicholas, with the parochial chapelries of All Saints, St. Andrew, St. John, and St. Ann, whose churches we shall now proceed to describe.

St. Nicholas's Church occupies a fine position on the top of an eminence, which rises abruptly from the river nearly to the centre of the town. It was erected by Osmund, Bishop of Salisbury, in the year 1080, subsequent to which it was destroyed by fire, and rebuilt in 1350. Since this latter period it has undergone many extensive alterations and repairs, and, as it stands, is at once the most conspicuous, as well as the most antiquesque beautiful and imposing of all the town's rich assemblage of edifices. It is a cruciform structure, in the decorated style of English architecture, consisting of nave and aisles, transepts, choir and aisles, and a steeply rising steeple, which has been described by almost every writer who has spoken of Newcastle. This steeple is upwards of 200 feet in height. From the ground to the battlements it is divided into three stages, or architectural designs, the first one being pierced by the principal entrance and a noble window. At the corners of the tower are bold buttresses, surmounted by octagonal turrets and crocketed pinnacles. From the basis of these turrets spring four fine buttresses, of very graceful form, with crocketed edges, and from their point of intersection, near the centre, rises a very light and elegant square lantern with a crocketed pyramidal spire at its summit and crocketed pinnacles at its angles. The whole appearance of this crowning termination is simple and graceful. The tower contains a peal of eight very musical bells, the largest of which was placed in the tower in December 1833. The extreme dimensions of this church are, from east to west, 245 feet, and from north to south in the transepts, 128 feet. The grand entrance is in the west front, under a deep pointed arch over which is a fine large window of five lights, ornamented with tracery. The north side of the nave was, some time ago, newly finished, and, with the exception of its windows, the style of the original has been strictly preserved. The north transept is enclosed with an iron railing, and is remarkable for the beauty of its windows, especially the northern one, which is an exquisite piece of workmanship, consisting of five lights, separated by lofty mullions, and ornamented with elegant tracery. The east end contains a splendid seven-light window with flowing tracery, which lights the choir. The south transept, usually called St. Mary's porch, contains a very fine window of five lights, similar in style to that at the eastern end of the church. Having now taken a hasty survey of the exterior, let us examine the interior of this venerable edifice: and, on entering the great west door, the stranger will immediately notice its cathedral-like appearance. The boldness of the elevated groined roof, and the massy pillars by which the lofty fabric of the tower is supported—the solemn effect of the light and shade presented through the arches by which the aisles are divided—will combine to produce mingled sensations of awe and gratification. The font is situated near the western entrance. It is a plain octagonal marble vase, supported by a fluted octahedral stone column rising from a solidly formed base, elevated on a broad stone pedestal two steps high, and its eight faces are each sculptured with a shield of arms. Suspended over the font by four light pillars resting on its rim is a rich and lofty canopy, which, as a specimen of carved work, is a masterpiece of its kind. The south transept is handsomely stalled with a portion of the old oak furniture which adorned the choir previous to the innovations of 1793. The choir exhibits much of the character of the nave, except in its windows, which are considerably larger. The organ, a magnificent instrument, containing two thousand stops, is placed over the principal entrance to the choir. The principal feature in this part of the church is the great east window, already mentioned.

centre compartment is occupied by a fine figure of the Redeemer bearing cross, with the sponge and other adjuncts of the passion annexed. Each of the windows there is a valuable altar-piece, by Tintoretto, presented by Matthew White Ridley, Bart., in 1818. The subject of this painting is Jesus washing the feet of his disciples. This church contains several fine specimens of sculpture, and a great variety of sepulchral monuments, which amply repay a careful inspection. Of all the northern churches this is said to have been the richest in the number and beauty of its chantries, which, at the time of the dissolution, amounted to nine or ten. These chantries were endowed with lands and other revenues for the support of chaplains. The parish register commences in 1558. The living is now a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland and deanery of Newcastle, valued at £50; gross income, £883. Patron, the Bishop of Carlisle. Adjoining the church on the south side is St. Nicholas's and Dr. Tomlinson's library, containing many valuable and curious works. It is open to the public gratuitously every day (Sundays and holidays excepted) from ten to five.

St. Andrew's Church is situated on the west side of Newgate-street, and is traditionally asserted to be the oldest church in Newcastle; its erection being ascribed to David, the church and abbey building monarch of Scotland.

The style of architecture seems to have been originally Norman, but, as a whole, the building has been much modified by frequent alterations and repairs. There is a fine painting of the "Last Supper," by Giordano, in this church, which also possesses a splendid service of plate, and a fine organ, containing twenty-nine stops. St. Andrew's formerly possessed three chantries, which were dissolved at the suppression of the religious houses. The parish register commences in 1597. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Newcastle.

All Saints' Church is situated on the brow of a steep bank, on the south side of Silver-street, at the foot of Pilgrim-street. It was erected in 1796, at a cost of £27,000, on the site of the former church of All Saints, which was erected previous to the year 1824, but the precise date is not known. It is an elliptical structure of 80 feet by 72, and is in Grecian style of architecture, the spire having an elevation of 202 feet. This elegant edifice is constructed of freestone, and the pews are all formed of mahogany. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Newcastle; gross income, £330. The register commences in 1600.

St. John's Church, situated on the west side of Westgate-street, is a large cruciform structure, probably of the age of Edward I., and chiefly of the early English character, but greatly affected by comparatively modern alterations and enlargements. It is surmounted by a quadrangular embattled tower, and contains a font venerable for its antiquity, several ancient monuments, an altarpiece, and a painted window, by Mr. Gibson, of Newcastle. This church, anterior to the Reformation, possessed three chantries, which underwent the fate of the other religious establishments at that period. The register commences in 1587. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the vicar of Newcastle; gross income, £259.

St. Anne's Chapel is situated on the north side of the New-road. It was erected by the corporation, on the site of an old chapel dedicated to the same saint, and is a neat and commodious structure, erected with materials taken from that part of the town's wall which extended along the quay. This chapel was licensed as a district church, for baptisms, marriages, and deaths, in 1840. It will accommodate about 400 persons. The living is a curacy; gross income, £110.

St. Peter's Church, Oxford-street, was erected in 1843, as a chapel of ease to St. Andrew's. It is in the Gothic style, from a design by Mr. Dobson, and is capable of accommodating 1,134 persons. The chancel is ornamented with beautiful stained glass windows, and a painting of the Crucifixion, by Reed. It was formed into a separate ecclesiastical district in 1844. The patronage of this church is vested in the crown and Bishop of Durham alternately.

St. Thomas's Chapel and St. Mary Magdalen's Hospital is situated at Barras Bridge. This beautiful structure was erected in 1830, from a design by Mr. Dobson, at a cost of £6,000. Since its opening its accommodation has been increased by the erection of galleries—a new organ has also been added. This church will accommodate 1,500 persons. Patrons, the corporation of Newcastle.

CATHOLICS.—The Catholic Cathedral of St. Mary is situated on a conspicuous site in West Clayton-street, close to the Central Railway Station. It is a most successful revival of the old ecclesiastical structures of our country. It was erected from designs furnished by the celebrated architect, A. W. Pugin, Esq., and is a good specimen of the style of architecture which flourished during the fourteenth century. It is in the form of a parallelogram, and consists of a nave and aisles, with deep chancel and lateral chapels. Its external dimensions are—from east to west, 135 feet, from north to south, 60 feet 6 inches, and the tower and spire, when completed, will be 200 feet in height. The grand entrance is in the west front, which is splendidly decorated. The entrance doorway is deeply recessed and richly moulded, over which is the great west window, consisting of five lights, with tracery above. At the sides of this fine window are two canopied niches—the left hand one containing a statue of Venerable Bede, and the right hand one a figure of St. Cuthbert, both carved in Caen stone. The tower is at the south end, its lower part is made to serve as a south porch. At present, for want of funds to complete it, a temporary roof has been put on it at the height of its first stage. The door leading into the church from the porch is ornamented with rich mouldings, and in a niche over the doorway is a beautifully carved figure of the Blessed Virgin, with the infant Saviour, and angels bearing torches. The interior of the church is characterised by an elegance of arrangement which bespeaks the master-hand by which it was designed, and reminds you, on entering, of some of the best efforts of the ancient church builders in this country; the nave is divided into four bays, the piers are clustered, with plain capitals, and are ten feet in height, supporting equilateral arches, with mouldings belonging to the decorated style. The roof of the nave is open, and is supported by beautifully carved corbels. The pulpit, which is constructed of Caen stone, is of very elegant design, and is placed on the north side of the nave, against the first pillar. The font, which is situated at the west end of the south aisle, is of octagonal form, in Caen stone, and is finely carved, with the figure of a lamb, and the symbols of the four evangelists. The chancel is thirty seven feet long, and consists of two parts; the choir, raised one step above the nave, where the stalls for the chapter, choristers, &c., are placed; and the sanctuary, which is one step higher than the choir. The chancel and side chapels are laid with encaustic tiles of various patterns. The rood-screen is not yet erected, but if the design of the architect be carried out, it will consist of open tracery work in stone, surmounted by a large crucifix and figure.

e Blessed Virgin and Beloved Disciple. The high altar is of Caen stone, its front is handsomely carved, with representations of the principal events in the life of the Blessed Virgin. Over the altar is a magnificent window of lights, occupying the whole eastern extremity of the chancel. It is what is commonly called a "Jesse window," and represents the genealogy of Christ, leading to St. Matthew. On the north side of the chancel is the chapel of the Blessed Sacrament, which contains a beautifully carved altar and reredos, together with a fine stained glass window, whose centre light is filled with a full-length figure of the "Good Shepherd," the side lights representing the Apostles. The north side of this chapel has two windows filled with stained glass, bearing inscriptions having reference to the Blessed Sacrament. On the south side of the chancel is the chapel of our Lady, which contains a beautiful altar and reredos of Caen stone, ornamented with some exquisite carvings. The east window of this chapel has, in its centre light, a figure of the Blessed Virgin, and in the side lights figures of St. George and St. John the Evangelist. Over the door in this chapel which leads into the cloister, is a small circular light window, with a figure of St. Helena. Besides the windows above described, the church contains a mortuary window to the memory of the Rev. James Worswick, who was for many years the senior priest of Newcastle; and another to the memory of the Rev. J. L. Eyre. In addition to these there is a "Bede Window" — in the centre light of which is a full-length figure of the venerable Bede, in his monastic habit, holding his various works in his right hand, and in the side lights the chief incidents of his life are represented. This is a slight description of this splendid edifice, which occupied two years in building. It was opened on the 21st of August, 1844, on which occasion the bishops and above seventy priests assisted at the solemn dedication. Like the structure altogether, with its massive columns, lofty arches, vaulted roof, and cloistered aisles, and it must be acknowledged that it is a credit to the body to whom it belongs, and an ornament to the town.

St. Andrew's Church, Pilgrim-street, was opened in 1798. It is a brick edifice, ninety feet in length by thirty-six in width, and having undergone extensive alterations in 1830, will now accommodate upwards of 1,500 persons. It contains two side galleries, and a very fine-toned organ. The altar is placed in an alcove, which is surmounted by a beautiful painting of the crucifixion, by Maria Cosway.

St. Patrick's Church, Wall Knoll, was erected in 1765 by a Presbyterian congregation, who gave it up in 1841. It was afterwards used as a Sunday-school, and, having been recently purchased by the Catholics, was opened according to the rites of their religion in June, 1852.

BAPTISTS.—The Baptists have five places of worship in Newcastle, viz :—Brandling Place Chapel, a small building, erected in 1838; Bewick-street Chapel, a handsome stone structure, built in 1853; New Bridge-street Chapel, which was erected in 1839; New Court Chapel, situated in Westgate-street; and Westgate Chapel.

FRIENDS.—The Friends' Meeting House, situated in Pilgrim-street, was erected in 1805, upon a site which had been purchased in 1798. It was enlarged in 1812, and since that time has undergone several alterations, possessing at present ample accommodation for 500 persons. Adjoining the building, on the side next the Manors, there is a burialground, a school-room, and a large room which is used occasionally for meetings.

INDEPENDENTS.—The Independents have three chapels here. St. James's, Blackett-street, is a plain but well-built stone edifice, with a massive portico, of the Doric order, and was erected in 1826, from a design by John Dobson Esq., at a cost of £2,218; the interior is well arranged, and contains sittings for 500 persons. West Clayton-street Chapel (Congregationalist) is a commodious structure in the Roman style, and contains sittings for 100 persons. There is also St. Paul's (Congregationalist) at Arthur's Hill.

METHODISTS (New Connexion).—This section of the Methodist body has two places of worship in the town, viz:—Salem Chapel, situated in East street, which was erected in 1835, at a cost of £3,700, and will accommodate 900 persons. It is in the Grecian style, and has a recessed portico of fluted Doric columns; the pilasters and entablature are enriched with wreaths, &c. The other chapel is at St. Peter's Quay.

METHODISTS (Primitive).—The Primitive Methodists have six chapels in Newcastle, the principal of which is Nelson-street Chapel, a fine commodious structure, in the Roman style, which contains sittings for nearly 1,000 persons. The other chapels are situated at Ballast-hills, Byker-hill, Brangbank, Dent's hole, and William-street.

METHODISTS (Wesleyan).—The chapels belonging to the Wesleyans are Brunswick-place Chapel, a fine structure, one of the most commodious in the north of England; Blenheim-street Chapel, New-road Chapel; besides these at Arthur's hill, Byker-hill, and St. Lawrence. The Wesleyan Methodist Reformers have chapels in New Bridge-street, and in Brunswick-street.

PRESBYTERIANS.—Newcastle possesses eight places of worship belonging to the various sections of the Presbyterian body. The Caledonian Chapel, Argyle-street, is a fine brick-edifice, erected in 1841, and will accommodate 800 persons. The John Knox Church, situated in West Clayton-street is a handsome and substantial stone structure, in the Gothic style, erected by subscription in 1851, at a cost of upwards of £2,043, and will accommodate 500 persons. High Bridge Chapel belongs to the Scotch Presbyterians, and was erected in 1766. Trinity Church, New Bridge-street, is a neat building in the early English style of architecture, and was erected in 1847. The United Secession Chapel, Blackett-street, was erected in 1821, at a cost of £1,350, and contains 576 sittings. Carlisle-street Chapel, which also belongs to the United Secession body, is a neat edifice, with an ashlar stone front, erected in 1823, at an expense of £1,430. It will seat about 600 persons. Clavering-place Chapel, also the property of the Secession body, is a fine commodious structure, capable of accommodating 700 persons. It was erected in 1822, and cost £1,020. Zion-court Chapel, situated in Westgate-street, is also the property of the same section of the Presbyterians.

UNITARIANS.—The Unitarians possess two places of worship here, viz. Glass House-street Chapel, St. Peter's, and the Church of the Divine Unity in New Bridge-street. The latter building was erected in 1854, and is in the decorated style of architecture.

Besides the places of worship just mentioned, there is a Glassite Chapel in the Wall Knoll; a Jews' Synagogue, in Temple-street; a Latter Day Saints' Meeting Room, in Nelson-street; a New Jerusalem Temple, in Park-street; and a Sailors' Bethel, on the Quay. For ministers, &c., see churches and chapels in the directory.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—The Royal Free Grammar School, situated in Charterhouse square, was founded by Thomas Horsley, mayor of Newcastle, in 1547. Queen Elizabeth incorporated it in 1599, from which period until the year 1844 the business of the school was transacted in the old chapel of St. Mary's Hospital, Westgate-street. By the above-mentioned charter of orporation, it is enacted that the masters and scholars shall be a body corporate in law, with perpetual succession, common seal, and power to purchase lands to themselves, and successors in fee-simple, or for a term of years, provided they exceed not the yearly value of £40. It is also enacted that the Latin and Greek languages are to be taught gratuitously. This school has gained considerably celebrity from the respectability and attainments of its teachers, and the many distinguished persons who have been educated within its walls. Among its eminent scholars, we find the names of Bishop Ridley, Sir Arkenside, Lord Collingwood, Lord Eldon, and Lord Stowell.

The Royal Jubilee School is situated in the new road, east of the Keelmen's Hospital, and was erected in 1810, at an expense of £2,194, to commemorate the fiftieth year of the reign of George III. It is supported by voluntary contributions and donations.

The Girls' Jubilee School, Croft-street, was erected in 1814, at a cost of £1,000, and was founded by the Duchess of Northumberland, assisted by a committee of ladies. Like the former school, it is supported by subscription.

The Clergy Jubilee School, situated on the east side of Carliol-square, was erected in 1826, at an expense of £2,300, in commemoration of Shute Barrington, Bishop of Durham, having attained the fiftieth year of his prelacy. In the same building, the scholars of St. Nicholas' Charity School are educated. This charity was established in 1705, and now embraces forty boys and the same number of girls, who are gratuitously clothed and educated. The boys on their leaving school to become apprentices, receive 20s. with a Bible, a Prayer Book, and a copy of "The Whole Duty of Man." The girls on going to service receive similar presents.

All Saints' Charity School is similar to that of St. Nicholas, just described, in the number of its pupils, and the presents received by them on their leaving school. It was founded by subscription in 1700, and is situated in close proximity to Jesus's Hospital, in Manor Chare.

St. Andrew's Schools comprise a charity, a national, and an infant school. The former was founded by Sir W. Blackett, who bequeathed two thirds of the interest of £1,000 for the educating and apprenticing of thirty poor boys of the parish, and the son of the founder added an annual sum sufficient for the clothing of the children. The revenue of this charity has been since augmented by numerous legacies, and the trustees, in consequence, have increased the number of boys from thirty to thirty-four. A similar establishment was founded in 1792, for the education and clothing of forty poor girls of this parish. The National Schools are situated in Percy-street and Eldon-lane, and were erected in 1839. The Boys' School occupies the ground floor, and the Girls' School the first floor, while the Infants' occupy that portion of the building adjacent to Percy-street. The boys and girls of St. Andrew's Charity Schools are educated in this establishment.

St. Ann's National School is situated on the New-road, at the corner of Elswick-lane. It was erected at the expense of the municipality in 1682, and is chiefly supported from the revenues of the corporation. The mayor and governor of the Hostmen's Company are presidents, and the curate and lecturer of All Saints' Church, with four other gentlemen, are trustees.

St. John's Charity, National, and Infant Schools—The Charity School was established in 1710, by Mr. John Ord, who bequeathed the rent of the Great Magdalen, or Mill Close, for its endowment. Its revenues have been since increased by other legacies, and twenty scholars are now clothed and educated gratuitously. These, on leaving school, are presented with the sum of five shillings and three religious books. The school for this charity was formerly situated in Cross-street, but on the erection of the National School, in Sunderland-street, in 1810, the pupils were removed thither. The Infant School is in Bath-lane, and is a neat building in the Gothic style, erected in 1836.

St. Andrew's (Catholic) Schools are situated in Carliol-square. They were erected principally by the untiring exertions of the Rev. J. Worswick and the Rev. W. Riddell, and were opened in the year 1833. These schools are in connection with the Committee of Council on Education, under whose authority thirteen pupil teachers, eight girls, and five boys, have been apprenticed. The average attendance is about 700 children.

The Infant School (Orphan House), Northumberland-street, was originally erected for a Methodist Chapel, by the Rev. John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, and, at the time of its erection, was the second chapel which the Methodist body had built in this country. A portion of it was subsequently converted into an infant school, for children between the ages of two and six years.

The Ragged and Industrial Schools, New-road, were erected in 1855, at a cost of about £3,000, and will accommodate 200 scholars. The attendance in the present (January, 1856) is eighty-seven boys and eighty-four girls, who are taught, fed, and partly clothed gratuitously. The schools are supported by subscription.

In addition to the above there are several other schools, both public and private, which our limited space will not allow us to describe more minutely. They will be found particularised, with the names of their respective teachers, under the head academies and schools in the directory.

HOSPITAL AND ALMSHOUSES.—The Hospital of the Holy Jesus, Manor Chare. This institution, commonly called the Town's Hospital, was erected in the year 1682, upon a portion of the site of the suppressed Augustinian Monastery. It was incorporated and endowed by the municipality under the 39th Elizabeth, c. 5, for the relief of freemen and freemen's widows, or the sons and daughters of freemen, and, by the deed of incorporation, it was declared that the mayor, aldermen, and common council of Newcastle for the time being, should be the visitors for the hospital. The number of inmates, as regulated by act of parliament, in 1847, consists of one master, twelve brethren, and thirty-seven sisters, each of whom receives £1 per lunar month, and is furnished with clothing and coals. The master receives £2 per annum extra. In addition to this, they receive 13s. 4d. each from charities which have been left to the hospital.

Blackett's and Davison's Hospital was situated in Manor Chare, south of Jesus Hospital, but it was removed in 1847, in consequence of railway operations. It was erected by the corporation, in 1754, for the pensioners of Sir Walter Blackett, and Mr. and Mrs. Davison's Charities, consisting of six poor widows of clergymen and merchants, six poor old bachelors, and six poor unmarried women, daughters or widows of burgesses.

The Keelmen's Hospital is situated on the north side of the New Road. It is a brick structure, rather gloomy in appearance, containing fifty-four chambers, besides a large one in the south front for general meetings, and was erected in 1701, at a cost of upwards of £2,000, by the keelmen of the Tyne, for the benefit of those of their body who are disabled by sickness or lameness, and so prevented from pursuing their usual employment.

The Peace and Unity Hospital, Westgate-street, is a neat building, in the thic style, erected by the corporation in 1814, for the support of forty indigent old freemen, or freemen's widows, and unmarried daughters. The inmates receive £1 each per lunar month, and are provided with coals, the corporation receiving £2 per annum extra. The "Municipal Corporations Act," passed in 1835, secured these allowances to those who were inmates at that time, for their lives, but the vacancies caused by death since that period have not been filled up.

St. Mary Magdalen's Hospital.—We have no authentic account of the original foundation of this hospital, but tradition tells us that it owes its origin

Henry I., who, "when the leprosy was raging with great violence in the kingdom, and almost every town was provided with a leprosy house, built this hospital for a master, brethren, and three sisters, who were to receive persons afflicted with the pestilence." It came to the sovereign by the statutes of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., and remained vested in the crown till the time of James I., who incorporated it with the chapel of St. Thomas a Becket, at the end of Tyne Bridge. By the charter of incorporation, it was decreed that the united institutions should consist of a master, who was at least to be a master of arts, and three old, poor, and unmarried burgesses of the town, who should be a body corporate in law, with the usual rights and privileges. The mayor and common council of Newcastle-upon-Tyne to be patrons, with the right of presentation, and power to review and alter the statutes. In 1827 an act of parliament was obtained, by which the master and brethren were empowered to grant building leases of the property belonging to this hospital, which is of considerable extent in Newcastle, and the act has since been extensively acted upon. At the time of the Charity Commissioners' Report, the income of this hospital amounted to £983 11s. 6d. per annum.

Hospital of St. Mary the Virgin.—We have met with no authentic account of the original foundation of this hospital, but it probably came to the crown by the statutes of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., in the same manner as the hospital of St. Mary Magdalen. In 1611, King James I. granted a new charter to this hospital, "Constituting the foundation, to consist of a master and six unmarried poor old men, incorporated and having a common seal, with power to let leases, &c. The mayor and burgesses of Newcastle to be the patrons." The annual income of this institution amounted to £41 19s. 8d. at the time of the Charity Commissioners' Report, but it has since been increased by a change in the manner of granting leases of the property belonging to the hospital. The almshouse is an incommodious and confined building in Pudding Chare, containing separate apartments for six poor men, who receive £6 each per annum, besides an allowance for coals.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS AND SOCIETIES.—The Infirmary was established in 1751, by a small society of benevolent individuals, at the suggestion of Mr. Richard Lambert, an eminent surgeon of the town. On the 9th of February of the above-mentioned year, a public subscription was commenced, which, by the following June, amounted to a sum sufficient to produce the annual revenue of £1,500. The first stone of the edifice was laid on the 5th day of September following, and in October, 1752, the building was finished, at a cost of about £3,000. In the year 1802, a further sum of £5,329 was subscribed for its enlargement. Considerable additions have recently been made to this excellent institution by the erection of a new wing, 116 feet in length by fifty-six in breadth. This wing contains four storeys, the lowest of which is divided into several rooms constituting the out-patient department. The three upper storeys are each separated by a central partition wall into two large wards for the reception of in-door patients. By this arrangement out-patients are provided with ample accommodation, and the in-patient department has received an accession of six large wards, capable of containing 144 patients. The cost of this enlargement, exclusive of interior fittings, was £5,821 10s. The Bishop of Durham is grand visitor, besides whom there are six presidents, six vice-presidents, and six stewards—these officers, together with the governors, regulate the affairs of the institution, and their reports are annually submitted to all the contributors. The establishment is supported by the interest arising from numerous legacies and annual subscriptions, payable in advance; and it must afford much gratification to the benevolent and humane mind to contemplate the extensive benefit that has been afforded by this infirmary. The number of patients admitted during the year ending 31st March, 1855, was: in-patients, 1,916; out-patients, 7,341; total, 9,257. Of this number, 3,753 were discharged cured; 293 relieved; and 123 died; the remainder, 184, remaining on the books. The income for the year 1854 was £3,951, and the expenses £4,536.

The Lunatic Asylum, situated on the east side of Bath Lane, was built by subscription in 1767, and is a well designed and skilfully constructed edifice, possessing accommodation for 88 patients, who are divided into six classes, each of which has a separate airing ground adjoining their apartments. In consequence of the death of the other subscribers it came into the possession of the corporation, in 1824, at which time the old building was improved and altered, under the superintendence of J. Dobson, Esq.; a lease of the building was granted at the same time, to T. N. Smith, M.D. and subsequently to Dr. Macintosh.

Ballgrove Retreat is a private lunatic asylum, retiredly situated between the "Leazes" and the Town Moor, and since 1766 has been devoted to its present use, for persons of respectability—none others being admissible. The establishment is conducted on the most approved and humane principles, and the apartments are fitted up with every convenience, and have garden ground attached.

The Dispensary, erected in 1838, is situated in Nelson-street. It is a fine commodious building, the front being in the Italian style, in unison with the other buildings in the same street. It contains every requisite accommodation for an institution of the kind, besides a dwelling-house for the resident medical officer. There is also the Eastern Free Dispensary, situated in Howard street, which is under the patronage of the Lord Bishop of Durham.

House of Recovery, or Fever Hospital.—This institution is a commodious and well ventilated Fever Hospital, situated in an airy and retired spot in Bath Lane. It was erected in 1804, at an expense of about £1,800, and contains seventeen rooms, outbuildings, &c. An annual subscription of one, or a donation of two guineas, is the qualification for governorship; but the medical officers alone decide on the admission of patients.

The Lying-in-Hospital is situated in New Bridge-street, and is a fine stone building, erected in 1826, at a cost of £1,550. The institution was founded in 1760, and a temporary hospital was opened in Rosemary-lane, but it was removed to the new hospital on its completion. It possesses accommodation for seventy poor married women. In addition to this there is an Out-charity, chiefly supported by ladies, which was founded the same year as the above.

The Eye Infirmary is situated in Saville-row. This institution, founded in 1822, owes its origin to the exertions of Messrs. T. M. Greenhow and John Eife, surgeons, and depends upon annual subscriptions and donations for its support. Patients are admitted every Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday.

Royal Victoria Asylum for the Industrious Blind.—This institution is situated in Northumberland-street, and was founded in 1838, to commemorate the coronation of Queen Victoria. The object of this establishment is to afford to the Indigent Blind, a religious, moral, and elementary education founded on scriptural principles, and to teach such trades as are suited to their capacities." The institution is supported by donations and subscriptions; assisted by the profits from the sale of the various articles manufactured by the inmates.

The Deaf and Dumb Institution is situated in Charlotte-square. It was founded in 1838 for the education of the deaf and dumb in the counties of Northumberland, Durham, Cumberland, and Westmoreland, and depends for its support on subscriptions, donations, and the payments which are made for the board of its inmates. Children are received as pupils from any of the four northern counties, at the rate of £10 per annum, payable half-yearly in advance. The regular time for admission is August, when the classes are resumed after the holidays. Children should be sent not later than eight years of age, so that their education may be completed at the proper time for their being apprenticed to some useful trade.

The Penitentiary.—This useful and praiseworthy institution is situated in Diana-street. It was founded in 1831, but the present edifice was not erected till 1837. It is constructed of brick, and contains nine apartments on the ground floor, and forty-two rooms on the first floor. It is under the patronage of the Mayor of Newcastle. For other institutions, &c. see Directory.

PUBLIC CIVIL BUILDINGS, &c.—The Tyne Bridge, which consists of nine elliptical arches, was built in 1776-84, at a cost of upwards of £30,000. In 1801, it was widened by arching from the buttresses, making the total width 33 feet 6 inches.

The High Level Bridge.—To understand the position and object of this famous bridge, it is requisite to know what are the outlets which railways have afforded to Newcastle. In the first place, then, there is the Newcastle and Carlisle Railway, which following the route of the great northern wall, stretches across the island almost from one sea to the other, and has been instrumental in supplying the west with coals from the east. Then there is the North Shields Line, which, starting from Pilgrim-street, near the eastern edge of Newcastle, spans over several hollows by lofty viaducts, and passes through North Shields to Tynemouth. Next, we have the Newcastle and Berwick Railway, which makes use of a portion of the last mentioned line, and then darts off northward towards Scotland. Lastly, we have the net-work of Durham railways, which, taking their departure from Gateshead, open up a communication with South Shields, Sunderland, Durham, York, and the south generally. Then came the great work—a work fit for the age and place. All these railways stopped short, at the several margins of the town; but in this age of engineering triumphs such accommodation would not suffice, commerce could not permit such a state of things to remain—she must and will have a central station, and this station requires enormous viaducts, stretching over the deeply-lying portions of the town. We consequently find the following gigantic plan has been carried out to effect this object. A spot of ground was selected near Neville-street, rather to the west of the centre of Newcastle, as the site of the central station, and thither the various lines were brought. The Carlisle line shoots past its former terminus, and arrives at Neville-street by a bold curve which passes close by the Infirmary. The Shields line, taking with it the Berwick line, spans Pilgrim-street, then, still more loftily, extends over the junction of the "Side" with Dean-street, and joins its Carlisle neighbour at Neville-street. But the great enterprise is still to be described—the crossing of the Tyne. The existing Newcastle Bridge accommodated the lower parts of Newcastle and Gateshead, but the railways occupied the heights of the two towns, and any railway over the Tyne must necessarily soar at a vast height over the river. The inhabitants had, for many years, under consideration the construction of a "High Level Bridge," for the service of the higher parts of the two towns, and after much negotiation, a plan was agreed upon between the railway companies and the corporation, by virtue of which, the former undertook the construction of one of the most astonishing structures, perhaps, in England, being actually a double bridge, consisting of a common foot and carriage bridge at a great height above the river, and a railway over that! This railway was to pass almost close by the castle, and to join the others at the grand central station. Such was the comprehensive plan proposed and executed. The great railway station is finished. The viaduct crosses the streets from Pilgrim-street to the vicinity of the castle, the railway bridge over the river exhibits two piers at the margin of the river, and four others in the stream itself, besides minor piers to support the land arches. These piers are of masonry and of immense strength. The distance from pier to pier is about 124 feet, and this determines the span of the arches. At a height of about 86 feet above high-water mark runs a level bridge for carriages, horses, and foot passengers, and at a further height of 23 feet runs the railway itself. The astonishing magnitude of this grand work will be better conceived by bearing in mind that the entire height of masonry and iron-work, from the bed of the river to the parapet of the railway, exceeds 132 feet! The entire length of the structure, from the high ground of Gateshead, to the high ground of Newcastle, is nearly 1,400 feet. The iron-work in this structure is estimated at 5,000 tons. The cost of the mason-work, in and over the river, amounted to more than £100,000, that of the mason and brick-work of the land arches to about an equal sum, and the iron-work to a still larger sum.

The Exchange or Town Hall, Sandhill, was erected in 1655, at an expense of £10,000, from a design by Robert Trollope. The lower storey is distributed into the fish market, a news-room, and piazzas. Some part of its ancient grandeur is still visible in the interior. The Court Room of the Merchant Adventurers, which occupies the eastern portion of the building, is not merely beautiful, but elaborately ornamented with a series of subjects of Scripture History, executed, in relief upon wood, with great skill. The apartments adjoining this room, and the grand staircase, are the Town Clerk's offices, and others occupied by the corporation. The Guild Hall is a lofty and magnificent court, with a fine oaken ceiling and rich antique embellishments.

The Corporate Buildings, now in course of erection in St. Nicholas-square, will, when finished, be a magnificent stone building in the Italian style, and will contain the various offices of the corporation, a music-hall, capable of accommodating 3,500 persons, with other rooms, offices, &c. Messrs. Johnstone and Knowles, of Newcastle, are the architects. The estimated cost is about £24,000.

thenian temple of Theseus, and is conspicuously situated on a lofty eminence 10 feet above the level of the river. It was erected in 1810-12, and covers an area of 144 feet by 72. On the north and south sides are grand porticos, supported by Doric pillars 28 feet high, and five feet in diameter. The internal arrangements are very complete for all the purposes required in a public edifice of the kind, and it occupies a spacious area, enclosed on the western side by a handsome range of iron palisades. The Assizes, for the county of Northumberland, are held here by the judges, twice a year, and the January Quarter Sessions are held in the same court.

The New Gaol and House of Correction is situated on the west side of Priol-square. It was erected in 1823, at a cost of about £35,000, from a design by John Dobson, Esq., and is a strong and massive erection, with a solid and formidable centre tower, and all the appliances of approved prison discipline. The different wards are arranged on the radiating principle, so that every avenue and court is visible from the lofty central tower, in which the apartments of the jailer and turnkeys are situated.

The Assembly Rooms are situated in a recess off the north side of Westgate-street, and south end of Fenkel-street. They were erected by subscription, from a design by Mr. Newton, and opened June 24th, 1776—the cost, including the fittings, amounted to nearly £7,000. They possess sufficient architectural finish to be a practical enconium on the taste of a bygone generation. The grand ball-room is 92½ feet long by 36 feet wide, and 32 feet in height, and is extremely chaste and elegant in its style of decorations. In this room there are seven splendid chandeliers, the central one alone of which cost £630.

The Branch Bank of England.—This establishment is situated on the west side of Grey-street, forming one of the centres to the first façade, which is composed of nine Corinthian columns and two pilasters upon a rusticated basement. The columns support an entablature, which is finished with a double row of balustrades.

The Northumberland and Durham District Bank is situated on the east side of Grey-street, and occupies the space between Market-street and Hood-street. This is a very chaste and elegant building, and is much admired. The basement storey is in the Doric style of architecture, the next storey in the Corinthian, with pilasters, capitals, and entablature, surmounted by a battlement and balustrades, ornamented with vases. This building is pronounced by competent judges, to be the most chaste and neatly decorated edifice in the town.

Besides these banks, there are Messrs. W. H. Lambton & Co.'s Bank, and the Newcastle Commercial Bank, in Dean-street, the Newcastle, Sunderland, and Durham Union Bank, in Mosley-street, and the Savings Bank, in the Royal Arcade.

Gas Works.—The original gas-works of Newcastle were erected in Forth-street, in 1817; but being shortly after abandoned, other works were erected in the Manors, and at the west end of Pipewellgate, in Gateshead. These were purchased by the "Newcastle-upon-Tyne and Gateshead Subscription Gas Company," in 1831, and were further increased in 1833 and 1837 by the erection of other works in Sandgate, North Shore.

The Central Railway Station is situated in Neville-street. It is a fine structure, erected in the Roman Doric style, from a design by Mr. Dobson. The principal front is 593 feet in length, having a portico in the centre, 200 feet long and 50 wide. The exterior front of the portico is composed of seven arches, supported by insulated columns, elevated on a basement 7½ feet high.

The portico is entered by an arch on each end. The passengers' shed is 36 feet long and 184 wide, the covered area being 10,995 square yards, or rather better than two acres. The roof is composed of circular iron principles divided into three compartments, and supported by metal pillars, whose respective distances vary 33 to 40 feet. Her Majesty Queen Victoria, opened this station on the 29th of August, 1850.

The Water Works.—The inhabitants of Newcastle are indebted to Richard Grainger for the present water-works, which, through his exertions, were established in the year 1842, under a board of directors called "The Wear and Dean Water Company." Soon after its establishment, this company purchased the former water works belonging to the Joint Stock Company, which had been in existence since 1833; and now supply the town copiously with the liquid element. In addition to the water supplied by the water works, the corporation has provided sixteen fountains in different parts of the town.

The Newcastle-upon-Tyne Poor-Law Union comprehends eleven parishes and townships, embracing an area of 7,012 statute acres, and a population in 1851 of 89,156 souls. The parishes are All Saints', St. John's, St. Nicholas', and St. Andrew's. The townships are Byker, Westgate, Elswick, Jesmond, Heaton, Benwell, and Fenham: the two latter are in the county of Northumberland, the others form the borough of Newcastle. The annual expenditure for the relief of the poor is about £28,000. This union is divided into four districts, over each of which there is a relieving officer. The board of guardians numbers eighty-five members, eighteen of whom are guardians ex officio, the remainder are elective. The Union Workhouse is situated on the Westgate turnpike road, about one mile west of Newcastle, and possesses accommodation for 900 persons. The present number of inmates is 524.

The Newcastle-upon-Tyne General Cemetery is situated at a short distance beyond Carlton-terrace, between the New-road and Benton-lane. It is of a triangular form and enclosed by a lofty wall, the contained area being about ten and a half acres. It was established by a company of shareholders in 1844 at an expense of £6,000, and is tastefully planted and arranged. The entrance is by a splendid archway between two chapels, which are surmounted by handsome and uniform, though low, towers. These chapels and towers, being constructed of beautifully veined freestone, form a very ornamental structure at this approach to the town.

The Westgate Hill General Cemetery is situated at the angle formed by the meeting of Elswick-lane and Carlisle-road. It was formed by a company of shareholders in 1825, and consists of three acres of ground which are laid out and planted in an ornamental style, in a similar manner as the cemetery of Pere la Chaise, at Paris. A small chapel and sexton's house stand near the entrance gate. In this place of interment there are no restrictions as to rites and ceremonies, the mode of burial being wholly left to the surviving friends.

LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC SOCIETIES.—The Literary and Philosophical Society occupies a fine edifice in the Grecian style of architecture, which was erected at a cost of about £12,000, in the year 1825, from a design by Mr. John Green. This structure is situated in Westgate-street, opposite the end of Collingwood-street. The society was founded in 1793, "for the discussion of the several branches of polite literature, inquiry into the situation and property of the mineral productions of this neighbourhood, and elucidation of the sciences applicable to commerce, antiquities, local history, biography, literary intelligence, nautical inquiries," &c. In the tenth year of the ciety's existence, a permanent lectureship was established, and the members have now an opportunity of attending courses of lectures delivered by the most eminent professors in the several departments of science and literature.

The Natural History Society is situated in buildings on the south side of the above institution, of which it is an offshoot. This society gives great attention to geognostic topics, and issues publications under the name of its transactions. It possesses a fine museum, which contains a valuable collection of birds and animals of various kinds, minerals, corals, and numerous curiosities, with drawings and sections of the coal district and that of the mountain limestone in the adjoining counties. The museum is open to the public from eleven to four every day, Sundays excepted, at a nominal charge or admission.

The Antiquarian Society, founded in 1813, by the exertions of Mr. John Bell, under the patronage of the Duke of Northumberland, is situated in the castle. This society was formed for the purpose of "inquiry into general subjects of antiquity, but more especially into those of the north of England, and particularly such as appertain to the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Durham." The society is composed of ordinary, corresponding, and honorary members. Three valuable museums, belonging respectively to these three societies, are united under the name of the Newcastle Museum.

The North of England Society of Arts.—This institution, situated on the ground floor of the building in which the Literary and Philosophical Society holds its meetings, was established in 1837, and has for its object not only the improvement of the public taste in matters appertaining to the fine arts, but also the bringing forth of such talent as might, without its aid, continue in obscurity.

The Literary, Scientific, and Mechanical Institution occupies the centre of a range of buildings in Blckett-street, between the Grey Column and Pilgrim-street, and possesses classes for chemistry, mathematics, geography, drawing, modern languages, and various departments of practical science.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne College of Medicine, Neville Hall, Neville-street. This institution was founded in June 1851, and in July of the same year received the recognition of the Worshipful Society of Apothecaries of London. In October 1851, it was recognised by the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and in January 1852, the Home Secretary empowered the University of London to receive the certificates of students at this institution for the purpose of graduation in medicine. The institution assumed a collegiate form in December 1851, and was admitted into connection with the University of Durham in January 1852.

Newcastle Mining College.—Mr. N. Wood, an eminent coal viewer, and president of the Mining Institute, a short time ago brought under the notice of the Duke of Northumberland the intention to found a college, requesting that his grace would lend his assistance. The noble duke, in answer to this appeal, signified to Mr. Wood, through his agent, Mr. Hugh Tayler, that in case the amount of subscribed capital should reach £15,000, his grace would add £5,000 to that sum, making it £20,000; and if it should reach £30,000, his grace would subscribe £10,000, making £40,000. This has given an impetus to the design, and it is now intended forthwith to apply to the other wealthy coal owners of this district for their support. Application will also be made to the leading manufacturers, as it is intended that the college shall give instruction in other branches of science besides those more immediately bearing on coal mining operations. In connection with this design there is another of a kindred character about to be realised. The library of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Newcastle is one of the most valuable and extensive in the north of England. The building which contains it was erected in 1825, at a cost of £12,000, the foundation-stone having been laid by the late Duke of Sussex. This library contains about 25,000 volumes, and it has been from time to time enriched by many valuable presents. Mr. Robert Stephenson, the eminent engineer, about two years ago, offered to pay one half of a debt the institution had incurred, amounting to £6,200, provided the other members of the society would find means to pay off the other half, and reduce the term of admission to one guinea per annum. The committee have obtained subscriptions to nearly the required amount, and at the annual meeting of the society, it is believed that it will be in a condition to accept Mr. Stephenson's offer.

Newcastle publishes six newspapers weekly, viz.:—The Newcastle Courant, The Newcastle Chronicle, The Newcastle Guardian, The Newcastle Journal, The North of England Advertiser, and The Northern Daily Express. It has also four news-rooms, in which the various metropolitan and provincial journals, reviews, and magazines may be perused, viz.:—The Exchange Subscription Rooms, in the south side of the Exchange—the Assembly Subscription News and Reading Rooms in Westgate-street—the Central Exchange Subscription News Room, in Grey-street—and the news-room of the Mechanics Institute, situate in Blackett-street.

The Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Shields, and Gateshead Chamber of Commerce has been established for the following purposes, viz.:—"The redressing of all grievances in any way affecting the trade or commerce of the country or of the district, the suggesting or facilitating of any measures calculated to promote the commercial interests of the community, and, generally, the attainment of such objects connected therewith, as the exertions of individuals may be less adequate to accomplish." It now comprises upwards of one hundred members.

MANUFACTURES, &c.—In viewing the vast industrial features of Newcastle, the absence of unity of objects in its various manufactures never fails to attract the observation of the stranger. "It is not," says a popular writer, "as at Manchester, where cotton reigns supreme; or in the West Riding towns, where wool is the staple of industry; or at Sheffield, where steel is the be-all and do-all; or at Birmingham, where everything imaginable is made from every imaginable metal; or at the Staffordshire potteries, where every one looks, and works, and thinks, and lives upon clay; or at Leicester, where stockings are regarded as the primum mobile of society. It is not thus on the Tyne: for though the colliers are beyond all others the characteristic features of the spot, yet their works are mainly subterranean: they seem to belong to a nether world, whose fruits appear at the surface only to be shipped and railed away to other regions. But we may probably find that this rich supply of coal has been the main agent in inducing the settlement of manufacturers on the Tyne, for most of the large establishments are of a character which render a great consumption of coal indispensable."

In treating of the various manufactories we will place the engineering establishments in the first rank. Establishments of which Newcastle may be justly proud, not from their antiquity, but from their connection with the name of Stephenson. This town is in every respect the birth-place of comotives, and some of the largest and finest steam-engines in the world erected here. Nowhere could a more fitting place be found for this wonderful manufacture, than the home of the extraordinary men who, beyond all others, have been mainly instrumental in developing the railway system.

Another great and important feature of Tyne industry is the glass manufacture. This material is made in and around Newcastle to an enormous extent—not merely in one of its forms, but in all: plate-glass, sheet-glass, window-glass, flint-glass, and bottle-glass. The cheapness of coal, the facilities for obtaining a supply of alkali and sand, and the vicinity of shipping ready to carry the manufactured produce to every quarter of the world, have doubtless all contributed to the settlement of the glass manufacture in this district. Potteries, too, are very numerous in this busy district. Earthenware was produced here as early as 1623; and, in 1791, we find seven potteries in full operation. There is abundance of clay in the vicinity of the Tyne and the Wear, fitted to make the coarser description of pottery and earthenware; and this circumstance, coupled with the abundance of coal and shipping, enables this northern district to drive Staffordshire out of the market in supplying coarse goods to Germany, Denmark, and other northern countries. The chemical works of the Tyne, though of comparatively modern introduction, hold a distinguished position among the manufactories of the north. We find them on both sides of the river stretching from Newcastle to Tynemouth, and we may form some notion of the extent and variety of the marvellous transmutations which are taking place within them, from the number of fifty chimneys whose summits are observable in every direction. These establishments produce soda, potash, sulphuric, muriatic, and nitric acids: chlorine, chloride of lime, alum, red-lead, &c., in great quantities. Some of these establishments are beautiful examples of scientific system, and present many striking features. In the preparation of sulphuric acid, for instance, there are in one establishment, leaden chambers employed, each two hundred feet in length, twenty in breadth, and twenty in height,—these are to contain the sulphur-vapour, from which the acid is afterwards formed. The same establishment possesses a platinum crucible, or still, in which acids are boiled, which cost as many guineas as it weighs ounces—one thousand! The lead works, again, are notable features. The lead produced by the rich mines of Alston Moor, and the dales of the Allen and the Wear, is smelted in “pigs,” or oblong blocks, in which condition it is brought to Newcastle, and here it is exposed to the operations of refining, shot-making, red-lead making, and white-lead making, or it is transformed into various forms of pipes, sheets, &c. Nearly all lead contains a little silver; if the proportion be even so small as five ounces of silver to a ton of lead, it will repay the process of refining; and this refining is a delicate and beautiful process, in which the silver by its different mechanical and chemical properties, is separated little by little from the lead. We find lead refining in this district mentioned so early as 1699. Shot making was carried on in the Manor Chare in 1749, and the shot tower and lead works at Low Elswick were established in 1796.

COMMERCE.—The principal exports of Newcastle are coals, lead, glass, iron, earthenware, bricks, fire-bricks, painters' colours, chemical preparations, soap, linen, and linen yarn, sailcloth, woollen goods, leather, ropes, machinery, coal tar, and grindstones. The trade in most of these articles, particularly in chemicals and the various preparations of lead, has been rapidly increasing for some time. The foreign import trade, in consequence of the more valuable articles of foreign produce being received coastwise and by rail from Hull, London, and other places, deals almost entirely in bulky articles for consumption in the town, and limited circumjacent district. Its principal articles are grain, timber, hides, hemp, flax, tallow, sulphur, bones, oak, Dutch cheese, wines, spirits, seeds, and fruits. The trade is much inferior to that of foreign exports, but it is rapidly increasing. In addition to foreign and import, Newcastle possesses an extensive coasting trade, which consists chiefly in coals, and, next to them, in the same articles as those of foreign export. The principal additional articles are plate-glass, bacon and butter, anchors and chain cables, and locomotive engines. The quantity and value of these goods are very large, and regular vessels are employed for their conveyance to London, Liverpool, Glasgow, Bristol, Edinburgh, Dundee, Stockton, Yarmouth, and various Irish ports. The receipts at the Custom House, Newcastle, during the year ending December 31st, 1854, were £334,695 10s. 2d.; the receipts of the previous year amounted to £341,606 6s. 8d., showing an apparent decrease in the revenue of 1854. But it will be remembered that the accounts, until a few months ago, were made up to the 5th January, and had the custom heretofore adopted been still in operation, the receipts of 1855 would have reached £340,049 9s. 1d. or only £1,557 less than 1854.

HARBOUR.—We find that soon after the Conquest records and charters were agreed upon, by which the width of the Tyne, near and below Newcastle, was divided into three parts, one of which was assigned to the county of Northumberland, one to the bishopric of Durham, and the middle of the channel was to be free to all. This division of the river led to many contests for the ownership and government of this important stream; but the general course of modern legislation has been to give increased power to the Corporation of Newcastle, whose jurisdiction formerly extended to high water mark on both sides of the river, from the sea to some distance above Newcastle, including the Creeks of Seaton Sluice and Blyth, and consequently the trade and shipping of Gateshead, North and South Shields, Blyth, and Hartley. The jurisdiction was somewhat curtailed about six years ago, when Shields was created a distinct port. The Tyne, at Newcastle, has a mean breadth of about 120 feet—it so ebbs at low water as to leave belts of dry beach, which affords even then a large extent of floating berth; it experiences a rise and spring tides of 12½ feet, and can bring up to the town, at all times, vessels of from 200 to 300 tons, and occasionally those of 400 tons.

MARKETS AND FAIRS.—The meat, vegetable, poultry, and butter markets are held every lawful day in the splendid market buildings elsewhere noted. The Fish Market is held on the ground floor of the Exchange, on the Sandhill, which place was fitted up for it in 1828, and is well supplied with every variety of fish. The Wheat Market is held every Tuesday and Saturday on the large area, near St. Nicholas's Church. The Cattle and Hay Markets are held on Tuesday. The former is situated at the south end of West Clayton-street, in front of Marlborough-crescent, and Derwent-place, and the latter in an open area, at the head of Percy-street. Fairs for horned cattle, sheep, and hogs; and for cloth, and woollen and other goods, are held on August 12th and the following nine days, and October 29th and the following nine days, and a town fair is held on November 22nd. A fair is held on the last Tuesday in May and the first Tuesday in every month for the sale of live title. Hirings for farm servants are held in Percy-street, on the first Tuesday in May and November. The Newcastle Races are held annually in June, on the Town Moor, about a mile north of the town.

COMPANIES, &c.—There are in Newcastle twelve companies, called mysteries, viz., drapers, mercers, skimmers, tailors, merchants of corn or boothmen, tanners, cordwainers, saddlers, butchers, smiths, and fullers and dyers. There are also, by charter, fifteen companies, called by-trades—masters and mariners, weavers, barber surgeons, shipwrights, coopers, house-carpenters, tanners, glovers, joiners, millers, curriers, colliers, slaters, glaziers, and tanners—the last is now extinct. There are likewise nine other companies—merchant adventurers, hostmen, bricklayers, ropemakers, upholsterers, sail-makers, goldsmiths, scriveners, and grocers. The masters and mariners are better known under their denomination of the Masters and Brethren of the Trinity House. They are a corporate body, and are said to have been originally a religious society. They had charters from Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, Elizabeth, James I., Charles II., and James II.; and have the sanction, in the matter of licensing pilots, of an act of parliament, passed in the 41st of the reign of George III. Their style and title under their last charter is “The Masters, Pilots, and Seamen of the Trinity House Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in the county of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.”

They are authorised by charter to receive prescribed dues for keeping two lights “the one at the entrance of the haven of the Tyne, and the other on the hill joining,” and “to appoint pilots, collect primage, and support a number of poor brethren or their wives.” Besides the two lights just mentioned, they also have beacons at Holy Island, Blyth, &c. They still exercise all these powers, and appoint and control pilots within the rivers and seas from Holy Island to Whitby. In the year 1505, they erected a residence for their poor brethren, buildings known as Trinity House, which at present contains a hall, board room, library, school, chapel, and lodgings for the poor brethren.

CORPORATION, &c.—In 1835, a bill received the sanction of the legislature for the “Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales,” and by the provisions of this act, the old corporation of this borough was dissolved, and a new body established, which consists of a mayor, fourteen aldermen, and forty-two councillors, with the customary assistant officers. Under the authority of this Municipal Act, the borough is divided into eight wards, called the St. Nicholas's, St. John's, All Saints' West, All Saints' East, St. Andrew's South, St. Andrew's North, Westgate, and Jesmond. Six of these wards elect six councillors each, and the two wards of Westgate and Jesmond elect only three each. The councillors retain the office for three years, but are eligible for re-election. A third of the number retire from office annually, and their vacancies are supplied by annual elections. The aldermen are now appointed by the councillors, and during their term of office, which is six years, they are members of the council, possessing no power or authority above the councillors. The mayor is elected annually by the council, aldermen and councillors alone being eligible. Previous to the passing of the above act, the mayor, recorder, aldermen, sheriff and common council were chosen from among the freemen of the town, also, all the officers of the corporation, and none but freemen could serve on juries, but these privileges are now enjoyed by the whole body of burgesses. The following is a summary of the various rights and privileges now enjoyed by the freemen of Newcastle. Freemen residing in the borough, or within seven miles of the same, possess the right of voting at the election of members of parliament, and are exempt from the payment of tolls, and town and port dues. Freemen are also eligible for membership in the various incorporated companies, several of which possess property to a very large amount. Each freeman, or widow of a deceased freeman, resident within the limits of the ancient borough, has the right of pasture for two milch cows upon the free commons. If a freeman's widow continues to carry on her husband's business, she enfranchises the apprentices left at his decease, she is also free from tolls, dues, &c., the same as her husband was when living. The rights of freemen are acquired by birth, apprenticeship, or by grant or gift from the corporation.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.—The present borough, as fixed by the Reform Act, includes the town and county of the town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and the townships of Elswick, Westgate, Jesmond, Heaton, and Byker. It comprises an area of 5,336 statute acres, and its population in 1851 was 37,784 souls. Newcastle has sent two members to parliament since the year 1282, when two of its "more wise and experienced citizens" were summoned to the parliament held at Shrewsbury. The present members are T. E. Headlam, Esq., and G. Ridley, Esq.

CHARITIES.—Joseph Simpson left £100 to be distributed to the ten oldest men in the Keelmen's Hospital, on Christmas Day. Newcastle is one of the twenty-four cities and towns to which Sir Thomas White gave, in rotation, the sum of £104, to be lent, in sums of £25, to four young freemen, without interest, for ten years. This charity was established in 1566. John I'rankelcyn, in 1572, left £100, which was to be lent out at interest at ten per cent, of which £3 6s. 8d. was to be paid to the poor of the almshouses, £2 to six aged men, and the residue was to be applied, part to the city of Durham, and part to the parish of Houghton-le-Spring, in the county of Durham. John March gave £100, which was to be lent at ten per cent interest; and the amount thus obtained was to be divided into two equal portions, one of which to be distributed amongst the poor of Newcastle, and the other amongst the poor of Heighington, county of Durham. Mark Milbank, Esq., William Carr, Esq., and John Rumney, Esq., left various sums of money, at different periods, amounting in the whole to £550; the interest of which, £42, is distributed in the following manner, £2 10s. to the inmates of Jesus's Hospital and the residue to the poor of the four parishes of Newcastle. Sir M. Milnes left to the poor of the parishes of St. Nicholas and All Saints £12. John Fenwick, Esq., left an annual sum of £1, to be distributed equally amongst the prisoners in the gaol. William Carr, Esq., in 1660, bequeathed £20, which was to be lent to merchants of Newcastle without interest. Thomas Davison the Elder, by will, 1675, left a rent charge of £18 per annum, to be applied to the poor of All Saints and St. Andrew's parishes, in specific sums, £3 to members of the Merchants' Company, and the residue to the poor. Timothy Davison, in 1694, bequeathed £300, the interest of which, amounting to £2 a-year, was to be distributed to poor brethren and sisters of the Merchants' Company, and to freemen, or the widows of freemen, in the four parishes. William and Henry Warmouth left £100, which was to be lent to certain prescribed persons without interest. John Rumney bequeathed £100, to be applied in a similar manner; and Joseph Atkinson £100 for like purpose. Thomas Davison the Younger left £500, the interest of which was to be devoted to setting up a freeman in trade.

PAROCHIAL CHARITIES.

Besides the Charity Schools, and their portion of the general charities, each parish possesses several bequests for charitable purposes, which are subjoin in a tabular form, for the convenience of reference:—

The following names arrived too late for insertion in their proper places :—

Hedington Joseph, superintendent of police, Waterloo Vale, South Shields.
 Hunter George, wine and spirit merchant, 27 High street, Gateshead.
 Hutchinson George S. O. farmer, Bellassis, Billingham township and parish, north-east division of Stockton Ward.
 Straker John, Esq., of Tynemouth, Northumberland, is now the proprietor of the Bradley Hall Estate, near Wolsingham.

BOARD OF TRADE RETURNS.

On February 27th, the monthly returns of the Board of Trade for the month ended January 31st, 1856, were issued. We subjoin the total declared value of the exports of British and Irish produce and manufactures during the month, including only the "enumerated articles:"—

FOR THE MONTH.

1855.....	5,709,278
1854.....	5,863,093

Including the "unenumerated" articles, the month's exports for 1856 are raised to £7,974,786, against £6,464,796 in the corresponding month of last year, and £6,692,542 in the corresponding month of 1854.

With regard to vessels employed in the foreign trade, 1,538 ships, of 464,615 tons, entered inwards during the month ended January 31st, 1856, against 1,726 of 336,478 tons in the corresponding month last year, and 1,756 of 530,619 tons in the corresponding month, 1854. In the month ended January 31st, this year, 2,297 ships, of 583,424 tons, cleared outwards, against 1,913 of 502,895 tons in the corresponding month last year, and 1,781 of 431,350 tons in the corresponding month, 1854.

With regard to vessels employed in the coasting trade of the United Kingdom, 10,183 ships, of 1,071,832 tons, entered inwards in the month ended January 31st, 1856, against 9,379 of 908,937 tons in the corresponding month of 1855, and 8,196 of 884,015 tons in the corresponding month of 1854. In the month ended 31st January, 1856, 10,421 ships, of 1,043,995 tons, cleared outwards, against 10,099 of 1,006,933 tons in the corresponding month last year, and 10,051 of 1,060,237 tons in the corresponding month of 1854.

GEOLOGY OF THE LAKE DISTRICT.

REVISED AND ADAPTED TO THE COUNTY OF DURHAM,

BY JOHN ROOKE, ESQ.,

OF AKEHEAD, WIGTON, CUMBERLAND.

THE progress of exact science has gradually brought Geology nearer to pure physics and distinct facts. No sound geologist now oversteps the boundaries here assigned him; unless, by the help of hypotheses duly applied, additional facts are gathered by observation and attention, for their better classification.

I do not propose to describe all that might be said on the Geology of the Lake District, my object being that of enabling the future student, while carrying on local enquiries, to comprehend the general character of such Geology, and what involves the several approaches thereto—everywhere showing an all-ruling order and harmony of structure, agreeable to infinite wisdom and a Creator's designs.

In order to detect those forms of drift, which laws of physical forces have determined, I have year after year traversed many miles of hill and dale, amidst the wildest recesses of the district, for the collection of facts in detail, without any other guide than those channels of tidal agency which the ocean still continues to flow upon. I acknowledge, in passing, however, the aid I have derived from Mr. Flintoff's model of these regions, which shows at a glance those general laws of a depository system that lead to the minute forms of mountain outlines, and even their sequence of deposition.

GEOLOGY AS AN ACCEPTED SCIENCE.—In the progress of exact observation, Geology has afforded ample materials for assigning it a place as a science among the several formulæ of mental induction. It now classes all rocks as oldest, intermediate, and newest; or, in other words, lowest, transition, and uppermost, in the order of superposition. This is determined by their respective types also, as azoic or non-fossiliferous and unstratified, azoic and yet stratified, and zoic or fossiliferous strata.

Both generally, and in detail as well, this form of classification places an intermediate group between two extremes of lowest in position and uppermost. The entire frame of our globe, therefore, is classed as lowest and unstratified, commonly crystalline in structure also—transition, which includes intermediate sedimentary rocks, azoic or non-fossiliferous, in types and characters, and such upper stratifications as compose rocks within the records of zoic or fossiliferous appearances. Dividing these general orders specially and in a similar way, as given below, decides those relative dates when the material of all rocks passed from a state of drift to that of rest in admitted sequence of time. Azoic and zoic are negative and affirmative of fossil remains.

ZOIC ORDER.	SPECIAL GROUPS.
TERTIARY OR NEWEST.	{ The Newest or Pliocene { Earlier or Miocene { Earliest of the Group or Eocene
SECONDARY OR INTERMEDIATE.	{ Chalk, the uppermost; re-divided into uppermost, lower, and lowest { Oolite, lower,   do.   do.   do. { Lias, lowest,   do.   do.   do.
PALÆOZOIC OR OLDEST.	{ New red sandstone, uppermost; re-divided into magnesian limestone, intermediate, and the lowest { Carboniferous group; coal measures, upper millstone grit, intermediate, limestone and gritstone lowest. { Old red sandstone, triplicated. { Protozoic group           do.*
TRANSITION AND AZOIC ORDER.
STRATIFIED AND AZOIC.	{ Schist, argillaceous mud, indurated by electro-chemical agency. { Mica schist,   do.   do.   do. { Green stone and gneiss, earliest, do.
UNSTRATIFIED AND AZOIC ORDER.
CRYSTALLINE IN STRUCTURE.	{ Porphyry, crystallised by electro-chemical agency. { Sienite, earlier, do.   do.   do. { Granite, earliest do.   do.   do.

Such a triplicate form of classification, applied to the general divisions of Geology, and ever including triplications within these outlines, is both easy in comprehension, and affords a ready reference to each class. Geology, as a science so treated, offers a lucid reading of the structure of our globe, places it amongst the exact sciences, and gives facilities for an examination of its records, as applied to the Lake District, which any tyro may readily understand, and trace through their several ramifications to minute incidents and contingencies.

UNACCEPTED GEOLOGY. — Every calm geologist admits, that the main portion of the materials which compose the frame of our globe, have been primarily drifted to the position they now hold, driven onwards by the forces of a vast rolling ocean, on terms of physical centricity and eccentricity.

On these laws of specific gravitation, then, the Neptunian theory of Geology takes its firm stand, and traces out the undulated surface of the globe in correspondence mainly with the depository laws of mud and water commingled, and, as physically constituted, when in a state of rolling activity, the water by its subtle motion drives mud either upon natural barriers, or into lines of mud, placed where the drifting forces of the water have been exhausted.

In opposition to these plain views of the structure of the globe, as referred * Agreeable to this form of classification, whether the Cambrian system of Professor Sedgwick, or the Silurian system, so called by Mr. Murchison, be referred to, they are but irregular instances of a protozoic group—limestone at the base, arenaceous flagstone intermediate, and schist bearing fossils uppermost, as the term protozoic group indicates, or the earliest records of fossil remains. The perfection of science being found in abstraction alone, which special facts commonly afford is imperfectly, those celebrated professors themselves could no longer remain at issue, under a system of generalised terms.

its undulated surface, the Vulcanic theory of Geology would seem to entertain one of two opinions—either that some power, which is begged, has lifted up parts of the earth in dome-shaped forms, or that an assumed outer crust thereof has been broken into waves of translation, like some vast field of ice, or rather the undulations of fluent materials taking the wave-like forms of a vast rolling ocean.

Facts, however, are continually at variance with either theory, and even both of them combined. For the advocates of such schemes, to reconcile the slippery hypothesis dealt in, beg the admission of an infinite series of "faults," so called, in their geological nomenclature, but which the Neptunian system has no need of, as the flowing lines of the earth's surface witness.

Nor do any two writers of the former class agree in opinion. Some go back to the time and notions of Strabo,—others would have the earth swelled outwards like a blown bladder,—while they all neglect or overlook those laws of oceanic forces, which have separated land from water on rigidly physical conditions, flowing from concentric motion into eccentric depositions, that constantly trace outlines leading to the primary impetus from whence those lines, whether vertically or horizontally taken, are geometrically drawn. Like the wren, their habitat is far apart from those regions of light in which the angle of truth dwells,—they are prone to flutter as critics nevertheless, or near in harmless breathings.

Mud and water compose the primary materials of our globe. "The vapours which arise from the sun, the fixed stars, and the tails of comets," as expressed in "Newton's Principia," "may fall by their gravity into the atmosphere of the planets, where they may be condensed and converted into water and humid gases, and afterwards by a slow heat (generated electro-chemically) graduate into salts, and sulphurs, and tinctures, and mire, and mud, and clay, and sand, and stones, and corals, and other earthy substances." These materials, then, have been drifted on laws of physical force and centrality, into the eccentric structure of an embodied globe, as we now find the figure and surface of the earth in form and aspect. These are the rigid terms on which Neptunian Geology rests, and from whence all its conclusions are drawn, in conformity to facts and phenomena.

"We find fire and water," says Dr. Buckland, "those two universal and antagonising forces which have materially influenced the condition of the globe." Again, "the state of the ingredients of crystalline rocks has, in a great degree, been influenced by chemical and electro-magnetic forces, whilst that of stratified sedimentary deposits has resulted chiefly from the mechanical action of moving water, and has occasionally been modified by large admixtures of animal and vegetable remains." The action of all these forces will be rendered most intelligible by examples of their effects, "found in the hypothesis of the original fluidity of the entire materials of the earth."

Professor Sedgwick has also said, that "all the slate beds were at first in the condition of a very fine mud or silt, deposited, layer above layer, by the sea;" further observing, that "beds of mud and sand were deposited in an ancient sea. Plutonic rocks were then, for many ages, poured out among the aqueous sediments—beds were broken up and re-cemented—plutonic silt and other materials in the finest comminution were deposited along with the igneous rocks—the effects were again and again repeated, till a deep sea was filled up with a formation many thousand feet in thickness."

Nor does the acute professor account for crystallization and induration in a manner different from that of Professor Buckland. He asks—"What are crystalline rocks, and the cleavage plane of slates, and all the perplexing phenomena of metallic veins, but the results of chemical action carried on upon a gigantic scale—of experiments made of old in nature's laboratory—which we can sometimes feebly imitate? The laws of electro-chemical action are among the greatest discoveries of modern times."

No writer has been more anxious to avoid or to correct error than the high intellect here quoted; nor more sensible how readily small errors may creep in, at variance with that chain of being we often attempt to interpret in vain. He observes by the way—"I will escape from the slippery ground of hypothesis."

When my distinguished friend, Andrew Crosse, Esq. at the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, held at Bristol in 1836, showed that by a slow galvanic process carried on in darkness, and applied to given ingredients, either in a state of mud, or held in a state of solution by water, they were convertible into every class of rocks from granite to the newest tertiary beds, he made that great discovery, which opened up a fresh path for the scientific investigators "of modern times." To use his own words—"For a long series of years I have considered the electric influence to be, metaphorically speaking, the right hand of the Almighty, used after the creation of elementary atoms, calling or collecting together the simple or compound bodies in which we find them, and resolving them into their original elements on the approach of an opposite electrical action; just as oxygen and hydrogen, in their relative proportions, are condensed into water, which again in its turn, by the application of a more powerful electrical current, is restored to its original elementary state. I have, in the whole course of my experiments, endeavoured to follow nature as far as was in my humble power, being perfectly convinced that, if one condition under which nature works be omitted, a greater or less failure will be the inevitable result. In conformity with this, I have observed that darkness most favours universal crystallization, and in many instances is quite indispensable. In short, we must be blind indeed not to feel convinced of the predominance of design. Throughout the whole earth, in every ramification, a blind imitation of nature will be more successful than an opened-eyed following of art."

Such are the words of the instructor and guide I very humbly follow. True to an avowal which is all his own, he said—"I must state, for the sake of truth and the science which I follow, that I am neither an atheist, nor a materialist, nor a self-imagined creator, but a humble and lowly reverencer of that great Being, whose laws my accusers seem wholly to have lost sight of."

Unaccepted Geology, then, in reference to the primary state of these materials which compose the earth's frame, and in reference also to electro-chemical agency, viewed as conditions concerned in the crystallization, induration, and cementation of rocks—this portion of the subject in hand may be taken as settled; and also that geological conclusions have advanced in correspondence with chemical and electrical science. What is accepted in the latter, may now be fairly taken as accepted in application to the former, and as sanctioned by the most celebrated names of past and present days. These considerations obviously bring us to those laws of drifting forces, which have determined the surface appearances of the globe.

To the question, "What is electro-chemical agency?" the true answer would seem to be, electricity. Viewed in itself as a special agent, it is purely immaterial, and has no place in any specific element or material body. All material bodies and elements are in an inconceivably active state. The earth, for instance, moves in its orbit some 68,000 miles per hour, and 1,000 miles per hour on its axis, and nevertheless preserves a motive balance. Electricity would, therefore, seem to be the equilibrium of inconceivably active forces. Hence it is merely the amazingly active law of being, as seen telegraphically, and ever resolving itself into an equilibrium of relative gravity. For, although the earth moves at a speed so enormous, yet the exactness of its elemental balance is such that its equilibrium is constantly preserved, notwithstanding the vast movements of a material frame; and this brings us to those exactnesses in physical activity which are universally diffused. In other words, gravitation is exact in its final results, proving thereby the wondrous uniformity of physical force, as regulated by the relative state of being; and from what we know of electricity, and learn about the movements of the universe, may be but a trivial disturbance of some local equilibrium.

In the vast agitations of universal force, nothing can therefore be in a state of absolute rest. The mud of which the globe is admitted to be composed primarily, would therefore necessarily take a form determined by mechanical centricity, losing its balance in part, and flying into eccentric forms. Hence the form of the globe is an oblate spheroid eccentrically constructed, nor could its surface be primarily a level plane. Eccentric results would necessarily, in the separation of mud and water, trace out deep furrows in the depositions of the former, and these furrows in detail would resolve them into eccentric delineations, even though the first impetus were concentric; and such furrows constantly deepening would lower the water from the hills, while there would be a constant tendency to that which did not absolutely happen.

In "Wyld's Popular Atlas," Mr. Hyde Clark says:—"The paths or orbits of the planets are in irregular-shaped ellipses, because, according to physical laws, they cannot be circular. For, in nature, a circle or right line is never formed, nor is the same shape ever gone over again, which would be the case if the orbits were circular. In nature, there is always a contest between centricity and eccentricity." Such, then, are the terms to which physical philosophy has been brought, and that now sanction its appliance to Geology as a branch in science flowing therefrom; and in these respects Geology must be taken as a department of pure science referable to facts, physics, and classification.

DISTRIBUTION OF LAND AND WATER OVER THE EARTH'S SURFACE.—The earth may be said to be mechanically balanced in equipoise upon its axis, moving some 68,000 miles per hour in its orbit, and 1,000 miles per hour on its poles. On these terms a motive impetus is given, which naturally involves centripetal and centrifugal forces, which contribute to counterbalance and fix the limitations of each other in equilibrio. As, then, the primary materials to which the globe owed its structure, were mud and water blended together, and constantly rolling at a high speed amidst elemental fluids, so was a physical force generated, by which its material body has been drifted into an irregularly-shaped oblate spheroid.

Determined in figure by the physical conditions of a globe in motion—though laws of rest naturally caused mud and water to descend upon the poles; yet the rate of its rolling impetus had a still higher tendency to lift them towards the equator, and so flattened the form of the polar regions—conditions to which the waters of the earth still conform, as relatively compared to that of the tropics. Hence the prevailing law of physical force was that of water driving away mud, in the direction of the tropics from the polar regions. When viewed eccentrically, we find this tendency vastly stronger from the southern than the northern pole. And this law of the distribution of water upon the surface of the earth is still the same as at the most early date, retaining the ancient lines of direction into which it was primarily and physically driven by the first figures of dry land, or mud separated and deposited apart from the great deeps. Were an eccentric circle drawn around the south pole, we should find a space occupied by water alone equal to about one half the area of the entire globe, while we observe a basin of water mainly occupying the north pole, surrounded by a circuit of land, the rivers of which clearly bear upon that pole, the Atlantic presenting an elongated outline. But we find it, also, a cross link of water which connects the two polar basins, and everywhere resembling a mighty river, rather than the circular basins of the poles, the necessary turning ground of the ocean.

We experimentally and theoretically find, that a portion of water placed upon a globe in a given motion, necessarily has, in the distribution thereof, its primary impetus from the axis. The physical force, therefore, by which water in motion, upon the surface of the earth, cleared itself from mud primarily, was theoretically that of drifting such mud upon the equator, and so forming a crest of dry land thereon.

Nevertheless, eccentric results obtained; and we find this primary theory experimentally correct in approximation only. Like a bias in a loaded bowl, land is heavier towards the north than the south pole, so that the crest of this drifted mud was deposited in excess on the northern line of the equator. Nor did this eccentric law of physical force stop here; it applies to the axis of the old world only. The mighty flood of waters, deriving its gigantic impetus from the south pole eccentrically, has broken through the tropical crest just shown, and fixed the axis of the new world at right angles nearly to that of the old world, and thus placing the river-like form of the Atlantic Ocean with uncommon regularity between them; so that we find the axis of America from Cape Horn, through the rocky mountains into the Arctic Ocean, placed in a continuously flowing line throughout, and directly across the equatorial region, presenting at the same time the two eccentric figures of North and South America, even in outline similar to the coast of Africa.

MOTIVE DISTRIBUTION OF THE OCEAN.—When mechanical and physical forces had determined to dry the land of the earth, by drifting mud from the poles towards the equator, and deposits had taken their several forms conformably to the laws of gravitation here so distinctly illustrated, the motion of the great deeps took a settled course throughout, coincident with the figures of the dry land previously finished. The earth's motion being eastward, the flowing waters resting on its surface took a relatively westward movement, in combination with that which ejected those waters lineally from the south pole upon the north pole, to be in their turn propelled southward again by the projectile force of the land they fell upon.

As a general theory, then, the Pacific Ocean moves westward and northward, in conformity to the united forces of a double impetus derived from a globe in motion, and partly overspread by waters, which rest upon an unequal surface. Hence the waters of the Pacific are ejected through the Atlantic Ocean into the Arctic Ocean, and from thence projected back again through the Atlantic into the Pacific. Such are the general laws and results which determine and regulate the motions of the great deeps in their order of currents and counter-currents, and from whence the local tides have their origin. Here we discover, by rigid induction, those projectile forces in agreement with which oceanic currents traverse the surface of the earth among fixed barriers of land; and the well known Gulf-stream of the Atlantic Ocean affords a link in this great system, to which we may readily attach the rest of the continuous chain. While this stream flows along the channels of the Atlantic, we fail in detecting a tidal swell, until its force breaks upon the more shallow and confined shores of Europe. Five hundred miles from their terminus, the tides which run upon the British Isles, have their origin in the deep channels of the Gulf-stream; and the Lake District is equi-distant from three separate tide waves which anciently fell upon its shores.

First, one from the coast of Norway, which now flows into the strait of Dover, and ends there. A second starts at the Gulf-stream, takes the north Irish channel, runs on St. Bee's Head, and divides itself northward in the Solway Frith, and southward to Morecambe Bay. A third wave, similar in origin, rounds the south of Ireland, fills the British Channel up to the strait of Dover, the Bristol Channel also, and meets the northern wave, as already traced out in Morecambe Bay.

Anciently, and as shown by distinct lines of depository material, the eternal records of past events, these three tide waves held their several bearings on the centre of the Lake District. On White Stones, or the plateau of Borrowdale, a flat rounded waste immediately to the north of Coddle Pike, at which point a southern wave has left deep scars of its terminal fury; while the rains that fall on the waste of White Stones shed themselves into the descending valleys of Watendlath, Stonethwaite, Langdale, and Easdale, being, in the language of Wordsworth, "like spokes from the nave of a wheel," on which all the main valleys of the Lake District immediately hold their bearings—from Ulleswater to Waste Water, Ennerdale, and Buttermere; so that the flattened waste of White Stones is the true dome around which all the main lakes of the district are severally clustered, as a common centre of drifted materials, and divested of faults, except those eccentric lines described in hill and valley, and necessarily a result of physical forces applied to the drifting of mud by currents of water to places of rest; the whole region being constructed in either direct barriers of collision, like the axis of the old world, or disposed in flowing lines similar to the new world.

UNSTRATIFIED AND CRYSTALLINE ROCKS WITHIN THE LAKE DISTRICT.—Primarily the material of this order of rocks has been deposited in the form of drifted mud, and subsequently crystallized by electro-chemical agency. Its irregular outlines would seem attributable to an outer frame having been imperfectly cemented, and large portions of such material, having been subject to denudation, have gone to the providing of material for future rocks composed of clay or sand. So it may probably be that the red sand of the river Dee, as seen in Braemar Forest, still points to the original site of the millstone grit, which now composes the chief material of the Penine chain of hills. The oldest rocks are commonly the hardest, and the best cemented. Yet such a rule is exceedingly liable to exceptions, and amounts to a proof that electro-chemical agency, by which crystallization has been mainly effected, has at all times been subject to very different degrees of intensity; and, therefore, like the baking of some brick-kiln, the original structure of granite and other crystalline rocks, has been subject to vast denudations, which have gone into the structures of newer deposits.

Were the induration of rocks the exponent of heat deeply seated in the earth's frame, that heat might have been expected to evince some constant or continuous proofs of its influence. But it is quite otherwise, and liable to repeated alternations of hard and soft rocks, as we trace any class of strata through its several beds; proving that these variations in hardness depended on the several plates of material in their separate series and other physical conditions, inducing electro-chemical activity in more or less intense degrees, which was probably no other difference in depositions than that of a calm and a highly agitated sea inducing electro-chemical influence.

In other words, three separate tide waves, exhausting their several forces on the central ground of the Lake District, and by a violent agitation of marine waters inducing a state of intense electro-chemical activity, which converted muddy materials into crystalline rocks. Strict attention to the physical conditions already given, affords ample data for describing an organic sequence of rocks lying within the area of the Lake District.

Granite is found on three points. First, that of Red Pike and Bootle; secondly, the Skiddaw granite; and, thirdly, that of Wasdale Crag or Shap Fells. It must be here held in view that, at the date when these isolated patches had been completed, all was sea around them, and that a vast rolling tide wave from off the coast of Norway flowed along the line of Ulleswater, directly on the angle of a line of wave coming through the north Irish channel, while a third wave from the south Irish channel, fell perpendicularly upon the meeting ground of the other two waves.

The primordial results of these physical conditions were a disorderly reef of granite and sienite, eighteen miles in length, beginning at Red Pike and ending at Bootle, with a small patch of grey granite, which is seen in Glenderaterra, between Skiddaw and Saddleback, along with the isolated patch of Wasdale Crag. Here we find granite on three points, and a tide wave taking its course between each of them, as represented by the lines of Ulleswater, Derwent Lake, and Windermere.

The most early additions made to these primary bases of depositions were the porphyry of Wanthwaite Crag and Naddle, the sienite of Carrock taking a direction in the immediate line of the Skiddaw granite and the green stone of Binsey, which afford an axis also in the line of the Skiddaw granite, and complete an angular figure presenting its apex southward, and open northward.

The relative structure of these first barriers, composed of crystalline rocks built up by electro-chemical agency amidst exhausted tide waves, provided embayed ground for a future depository dome to rest upon.

OLDEST SEDIMENTARY FORMATION.—The Skiddaw granite, in direct connection with the sienite of Carrock and the green stone of Binsey, afforded a nucleus for the oldest deposits to rest upon, and apart from the other groups of these hills; but on a limited area only, in the wilds of Skiddaw Forest and Glenderaterra, is the oldest transition and azoic class met with, exhibited in compact arenaceous strata giving forth a musical sound.

In tracing out the boundaries of the main nucleus of the Lake District, we find the crystalline system of Red Pike, seven miles apart in a north-east direction, from a similar axis which runs for five miles through Castlerigg, Naddle, St. John's Vale, and Wanthwaite Crag. Fourteen miles from this crag, in a south-easterly bearing, the porphyretic granite of Wasdale Crag is met with. In a south-easterly direction from this crag to Bootle, twenty-eight miles intervene, free from any appearance of unstratified rocks; and if to these spaces we add eighteen miles from Bootle to Red Pike, on summing the whole of them up, we find an outer girdle seventy-three miles in length, forming the true nucleus of the Lake District. But in retracing the limits of the oldest transition series, we find its area swelled out to a circuit of ninety-one miles—namely, from Red Pike, by Honister Cragg, Castlerigg, the porphyry of St. John's, and Wanthwaite Cragg, to Stybarrow Cragg, Place Fell, Swarth Fell, and Wasdale Cragg—the south-eastern buttress of this ground. Thence we observe it tending in a gentle concave form to Black Combe, and passing by Bootle and Muncaster Fell to Red Pike again.

Along the entire course of this circuit, towering craggs, elevated mountains, contorted stratification, deep cleavage plates, and stupendous waterfalls, proclaim a rugged sea beach at an early date, distinct from the newer features of the rest of the district; affording a sketch to the eye, which separates the azoic schist formation from the zoic schist, which, at a subsequent date, has been added to the entire circuit of a primary nucleus. Within the area of this primary nucleus, none of the chief lakes are found; and yet they all touch its immediate confines. Windermere, Ulleswater, Derwent, Buttermere, Coniston, and Ennerdale lakes, all go up to its borders, and encircle its boundaries. Wast Water, Thirlmere, Grasmere, and Hawes Water, lie within these physical boundaries. But its area contains within it nearly all the tarns; because these are the abutting termini of tide waves, which, whirling in strong rebounding eddies, circular pools are most beautifully figured out, and overhung by lofty precipices and bold escarpments, evincing the final throes of Atlantic forces in these interesting types of tidal activity imparting a solitary grandeur to those high regions.

And here a great variety of rocks are found, the classification of which is far from being settled. Drifted materials having been rolled into determinate positions by three separate tide waves, and placed upon bases which may have differed in their mineral composition; the electro-chemical conditions under which each locality was placed, being different as concerned the ingredients acted upon, and of the intensity of the galvanic action evolved also, results would differ, and afford that variety of mineral products met with in the nucleus of the system.

It may be inductively admitted that the area of this central nucleus of the Lake District, environed by crystalline rocks as we find it to be, is occupied by a similar structure at no considerable depth beneath its superincumbent formation. When these mountains, primarily composed of argillaceous and arenaceous mud, were deposited upon such a base, an intense galvanic battery was certain to be brought into full activity, and originate a fan-shaped cleavage, which is now admitted to be a leading feature in the Cordilleras, Appalachian, Allegany, and Alpine ranges of mountains. Nor does this law of cleavage, as a general rule, fail in the main nucleus of the Lake District; for we find the noted pale blue roofing slate, in a vertical form, traversing the centres of these mountains to their very summits, passing through Coniston Old Man into Langdale, and through Honister Cragg into Borrowdale, succeeded latterly by an inclined cleavage. Now, this is precisely what might be expected to follow, were a mountain of mud placed so as to form an electro-chemical battery; it would cleave the centre of such a mountain, bake it into vertical slates, and lastly give an inclined dip to its sides. Such terms form a leading feature in the nucleus of the Lake District. The cleavage is by no means connected with the beds of stratification, but the result of a mountain of mud, settling by its own superincumbent weight, and finally baked by electro-chemical means. These mountains do not admit the possibility of having been upheaved in undulations by the earth's crust breaking up in normal waves of translation, since they form a complete series of diverging lines, under the depository influence of three separate tide waves, all of which are finally concentrated on White Stones. Neither is that centre conspicuous in elevation, but the reverse—formed into a sort of rugged basin, amidst a circuit of lofty mountains.

In Naddle, thick beds of stratified schist are seen dipping to the south, on not more than some thirty degrees of inclination; and resting on conglomerate as the primary foundation of a future superstructure carried southward, until a true centre has been worked out on White Stones. Though the early deposits are somewhat complex, and drifted by a southern tide wave as far north as Naddle and St. John's Vale, yet we find the entire structure corresponding with laws of centricity at its close; and, by observation and attention, still capable of distinct analysis and synthesis, as if it were mechanical framework, each part fitted to its purpose and place designed.

THE PROTOZOIC GROUP includes all that belongs to either the Cambrian or the Silurian systems. However learned professors may be at issue about terms, the Protozoic group must stand an obvious generalization—based upon limestone; with arenaceous flagstone intermediate; and schist uppermost.

Here the witnesses of life begin; and afford us the records of Protozoic history, in a sudden lowering of an azoic sea beach having broken on the edges of contorted slates, from Black Combe on the west, to Wasdale Crag eastward; marked by a concave line of depression in height facing southward; and along which the towering heights of White Pike, Conistone Old Man, Yewdale Crag, Wansfell, Harterfell, and Wasdale Pike, from Black Combe to Wasdale Crag, determine the southern boundaries of an azoic system; and closely fitted to the base of these several structures, the Protozoic limestone is deposited, ever following the line of their winding course, even into the indentation of Yewdale, a mile in depth; and brought forwards again on the opposite of that vale, conformable to the towering hills composed of azoic schist.

Yet uniformly as the Protozoic limestone is plastered against the several bases of this line of hills, for twenty-eight miles in length, it is with equal uniformity denuded where cross currents had gone among the mountains northwards, as at Broadgate Beck, the river Duddon, Stock Beck, Conistone Beck, Langdale and Grasmere, Trout Beck, and Kent Mere; and is not met with in the Vale of Wasdale. Insomuch, barriers of azoic schist, caused an exhaustion of currents along their bases; and there the Protozoic limestone is met with. A regularity in facts, which denies any application of uplifting agency; and a multitude of disorders or faults, as a necessary result that cannot now be reconciled by a merely Vulcanian hypothesis.

PROTOZOIC FLAGSTONE.—Conformable to the limestone of this group, overlying arenaceous flagstones succeed thereto. No doubt agreeable to those laws of atomic proportion that determine the separation of muddy materials under a state of active floatation by water; and which is certain, at a future date, to shed much light on electro-chemical philosophy. But the errors of the day are yet too desperate and unyielding to admit the instruments employed by the great Architect of the Universe in created physics.

PROTOZOIC SCHIST.—On the entire foreground of the Protozoic limestone, in the direction of Morecambe Bay, or southward therefrom, we find beds of a schist, in superposition to that limestone. As this schist rests upon fossiliferous beds of flagstone or limes one, and is in itself fossiliferous, its true place must be Protozoic schist—a name which nobody can mistake at all acquainted with rocks bearing the slaty cleavage. All the series, slaty in structure, from the oldest Protozoic limestone occupying the southern frontier of an azoic formation, up to Morecambe Bay, must therefore be classed as Protozoic schist. So far these conclusions may be placed in the category of accepted Geology.

Nevertheless, here we arrive on delicate and questionable ground. How shall we settle the boundaries of Protozoic schist? From the Duddon to Fountains Fell in Yorkshire, a space of forty miles, radiations of schist, in advance of previous deposits, hold their sedimentary lines uniformly southward. Along this section, except where carboniferous limestone has been thrust into vacant spaces previously unoccupied thereby, we find the features of the district, the characters of its rocks, and the direction of its hills and valleys, perfectly con-similar. Insomuch are we justified in extending the limit of Protozoic schist from the Duddon to Fountains Fell, and as far northward as Sedbergh and Wasdale Cragg.

The Howgill, Cautley, and Tebay Fells, composed of schist, here come next under review. How shall we dispose of these? In what category shall we place them? It would seem that no deposits so old as azoic schist rest on the south-eastern shoulder of Wasdale Cragg. The schist of that locality—resting on the granite of Wasdale Cragg, very hard in structure, fine grained, blue in colour, complicated in its cleavage joints, and distorted in its beds of stratification—is spread over this shoulder in the form of a thin mantle, resting its border on the granite of Wasdale Cragg, and overlaid by subcrystalline limestone and old red sandstone, at Soap Wells. The character of this schist may be readily accounted for, and sheds much light on Geology as a science. Mineral plates, so dissimilar in composition and structure as granite and schist, placed under the influence of oceanic torrents, would physically form a more intense electro-chemical battery than plates of Protozoic schist resting on each other, and elicit a local excess of electro-chemical intensity correspondingly.

The group of hills, therefore, lying on the south-eastern shoulder of Wasdale Cragg, cannot be placed in azoic period of deposits, but in that of Protozoic schist—coeval with that of Conistone, which also goes near the immediate border of azoic schist. The Tebay, Cautley, and Howgill Fells, also, belong therefore to the Protozoic schist.

With a body of facts before us, so plainly verified, how shall we class the several clusters of hills that lie on the northern borders of the main nucleus of the Lake District? Does the same rule of classification, which so distinctly applies to the southern region of this nucleus, fail in its application to its immediate northern border? By no means.

The group of hills which shed their waters into the Derwent and Cocker, from Peel Wyke to Gatesgarth, must be classed as Protozoic schist. These are Harroth Fell, Wythop Fells, Whiteside, Grassmoor, Ladhouse, Whiteless Pike, Grisdale Pike, Causey Pike, Catbells, Goldscope, Highsnab, and Robinson. The Skiddaw cluster of hills also, resting on their central nucleus, as already described, must, therefore, be similarly classed, as well as the district of Matteredale and Gowbarrow Parks, where extended beyond the boundaries of azoic schist.

The several hills also, bearing the slaty cleavage to the westward of the granite of Red Pike, follow the same order of classification. These are Dent, Coldfell, Bleng, and Ponsonby Fells, part of Copeland Forest, and Blakeley. Had space permitted, much might have been added in this place, in corroboration of the laws of drift, supported by physical facts, by which the materials

- of these hills have been rolled upon a previously constructed base. Fossils remains, indeed, conclusively show that a progressive subsidence of the ocean had taken place, inasmuch as animal and fossil plants are found deeply embedded in the earth, which have been the inhabitants of previously dry land. All the earth has been primarily covered by the ocean, and a portion of it then must have become dry land before the rest, and that portion is now the most elevated. I should be glad to learn what scheme and order of uplifting agency would agree with these plain facts, without violating mechanical laws, and those proofs which surface lineaments afford.

OLD RED SANDSTONE — At the close of the Protozoic group, from Red Pike, in the direction of St. Bee's Head, Dent was the most advanced tidal watershed point; yet old red sandstone is not seen resting thereon, but where a rebounding wave might be expected to place it amidst the exhausted folds of a tidal wave. It would appear to form the axis of Weddiker Rigg; and from thence to Hasket-New-Market, though nowhere detected, it probably underlies a newer group of Palæozoic strata.

To the southwards of Hasket New Market, it is met with—composes the conglomerates of Great and Little Millfell, and the Hill Dummallet. In Dacre Beck it is seen, in an intermediate state of Breccia; and, in ascending the hill to Dacre, the upper beds of its triplication are brought to view, overlaid by carbonaceous limestone. From Dummallet it may be traced to Sherburn Abbey, to Shap Wells; and in continuation southward to Raisbeck Common, where its area swells out to a considerable extent eastwards, until overlaid northwards by later deposits.

To the eastward of Blamptton, in the bed of the river Irthing, old red sandstone has been met with, and at Melmerby also is seen, dipping under Crossfell; and may be traced along the foot of the Crossfell range of hills to Birks Know, Knock Pike, Dufton Pike, and Murton Pike, where it seems deposited in a disorderly form, amidst exhausted eddies, occasioned by the waters of the Lune running across the Solway stream, and which accounts for the distorted structure of this line of conical hills, placed apart from each other in the form of isolated cones.

From these data here given, it may be inferred that a reef of old red sandstone, now overlaid partly by a newer system, had been formed at the same date, running from the Cheviots by Melmerby into Yorkshire, as the primary base of the Pennine chain. Yet by some geologists it is called the greatest fault in Europe, though a regular deposit on the meeting-ground of two opposing tide waves.

Here we are able to detect the progress of a change which occurred in the courses of the several tide waves, from the close of the Protozoic schist deposits, up to the completion of old red sandstone.

On the southern range of the Protozoic schist formation, from Black Combe on the west, to Fountains Fell in Yorkshire on the east, a highly spiculated frontier presents itself, everywhere conforming to the lines of drift determined by a southern tide wave, falling perpendicularly on a barrier lying across its course. Agreeable to these physical conditions, old red sandstone is found to have been drifted into the gorges of the Mint, near Kendal, the Lune, near Kirby Lonsdale, and the Rother, near Sedburgh—sanctioning an inference that the old red sandstone is probably overlaid extensively on the foreground here marked out, as the boundaries of Morecambe Bay at an early date.

OLDEST MILLSTONE GRIT.—While treating on the immediate laws of tidal agency which are connected with the Lake District, up to the deposition of dest millstone grit, it might scarcely appear requisite to trace the g of material from a distance. But as we observe the path of old red zone, in the Orkney Isles, to have been drifted out of northern deeps, from off the Scandinavian chain of mountains, which barred and red, at an early date, the wide-spread levels of north-eastern Europe, we are allowed to trace the connection between old red sandstone and the millstone grit.

In the distribution of materials by water, a granular millstone grit seems assimilated with old red sandstone as almost to blend the two in one, a still newer system commenced. The sandstone or millstone grit is with in the tributary streamlets of Eskdale and Liddesdale, holding a position equivalent to old red sandstone—that is, resting on schist—and hence called as old red sandstone by some geologists, but owing to the sharpness of granular structure, it may be regarded as a repetition of drifted sand from the Grampians and Scandinavian mountains, and which is still met with along the river Dee, in the Forest of Braemar, Aberdeenshire. It suggests denudations of granite, at different periods of time, may have supplied material of sandstones differing in colour from red to white.

In tracing the origin of sandstone to granite, its variety of colour, the position it has undergone, and its distribution as tidal drift, we seem carried back again to the primary groups of rocks. Starting, therefore, from crystalline rocks in situ, we follow tidal channels rigidly until we learn that they still remain the same in direction as of old.

The vast masses of conglomerate that overlie the southern escarpment of the Grampians, inform us about the path taken by much of the material which finally swelled out the structure of the Penine chain. We may find differences in the hardness of material drifted on the channels here pointed out, and in their degree of comminution; yet a process of drift along a flowing away helps to account for such differences satisfactorily, as well as the progressive changes which calcareous, carbonaceous, bituminous, basaltic, siliceous, and interstratified admixtures, have lent to silicious strata retro-chemically.

Tracing out a series of sedimentary dates according to these terms, leads to the true base of the Penine chain—namely, old red sandstone ascending progressively to the close of a lower millstone grit. A flowing tide wave first assorted the materials of drift agreeable to laws of physical force, and finally deposited them on ground where these forces were exhausted. Such is the fault of the Penine chain. Material has been rolled up a low inclined plane from the north-east, while its several beds have been scoured off from the westward. And such are the true waves of translation, again and again repeated, where an eastern wave ran into direct collision with a pair of western waves.

YELLOW SANDSTONE, THE LOWER LIMESTONE, AND LOWER COAL.—Recurring to what has gone before, and to the origin of sandstone, as the debris of a previous crystalline structure, we have next to trace the channels of drift from the arctic circle southwards. Conformably to the laws of centrifugal forces, there is a distribution of material from Polar regions, chiefly along meridional lines, eccentrically decided in the old world and the new world alike.

The state of the earth, at the close of an old red sandstone and lower millstone grit formation, must obviously have been different from what it now is, while a globe, composed mainly of mud, was undergoing inconceivably rapid changes in the deepening of some channels, the filling up of others, and the lowering of waters into those deepened channels—subduing and smoothing the proud waves of a once mighty ocean. At this date, also, crystallization and induration were but in progress, as electro-chemically carried on in the gigantic laboratory of an excited ocean, acting on huge admixtures of materials. Hence immense denudations of imperfectly cemented crystals, and indurated masses of mud, went into the composition of newer sandstone beds, the first sequence of which has been already treated upon.

Out of this chaos of primeval events, a smoother ocean sunk into deepened channels, and the first dry land arose amidst the great deeps. Such were the Scandinavian mountains, and the Grampians of Scotland. A genial climate then probably pervaded these hills, but little raised above the sea level, while the electro-chemical agency was actively at work beneath, a rapid and rank vegetation sprang into being, in the shallow waters that washed their bases. Bituminous and carbonaceous products were the result. Lime, at that date, held chiefly in a state of solution, assimilated with carbonic products, and provided vast stores of nutriment for animated nature to feed upon. Creation burst into life, and left records of its progress—an index for science, and an exponent of the Almighty fiat that had gone forth. Silicious and aluminous materials were henceforth subjected to a chemical process, which frequently discharged a portion of their colouring matter. By such process, old red sandstone passed into yellow sandstone. A section taken across Stratheden, at Strathmiglo, from the Ochill hills on the north, and thence to the Lomonds on the south, affords a distinct instance thereof, and also of the underlying basalt. At Edinburgh Castle similar phenomena are repeated, and also at Salisbury Craggs, Bambrough Castle, Dunstonbrough Castle, and Ratcheugh in Northumberland, consimilar facts are attested.

Tracing a conformable structure through Northumberland from Ratcheugh by Bavington to Thirkwall, we so far ascertain the several equivalents of old red sandstone, a lower millstone grit, and yellow sandstone, in an ascending series, until interstratified by a lower limestone and a lower coal, as found in a transverse section of Stratheden, at Strathmiglo; and a section taken from Shap Wells to Dudley Pike, affords a similar instance of transition in sandstones, from the old red to the yellow, interstratified by a lower limestone. From these records of the past we learn, through the chemical influence of vegetation, the several changes which bituminous and carbonaceous ingredients effected on sandstones, from the old red to the new red—precipitating lime at one date, and providing the material of coal at another.

BASALT.—The place held by basalt in the carboniferous system, and throughout the Penine chain of hills, a region intimately blended with the Geology of the Lake District, here claims a careful notice. Like the material of other sedimentary rocks, with which it is found interstratified, little need be said about its origin; it is merely a deposit composed of ordinary mud, blended with some twenty or twenty-five per cent of iron; while iron itself is a primary metal coeval with the earths, and, under given conditions, an electro-chemical firebrand. Taken as a motive force driven onwards by oceanic torrents, and in a finely comminuted state, mechanical laws, within given atomic proportions, have a tendency to separate it from sand and clay, which may be even deposited lineally by its side at the same time. In other words, its laws of aggregation being regulated by affinity and atomic properties, beds of sandstone may be deposited against it, and there find a place

t, where an exhausted force had occurred amidst an ocean of waters. Here we need not go further into a problem, which the progress of science probably solve at some future time, if it do not show that vegetation has concerned in the precipitation of ferruginous bases, and of lime also. We have, indeed, a complete chain of evidence from old red sandstone to new sandstone, that vegetation has stamped its records upon this transition sandstones, in colours, products, and interstratifications, at each period of deposition, as well as zoically.

In its course of drift out of northern deeps, basalt is found on the Isle of Arran, and on Canna, Rum, Eig, Muck, Staffa, Mull, and Rathlin; being spread over a large area of ground in Antrim, it has rounded the Mull of Cantyre, is met with in the Isle of Arran, has gone into Perthshire and the north of Glasgow and Edinburgh extensively, by both Cantyre and Peterhead. In the neighbourhood of Glasgow, rounded St. Abb's Head, it is met with on Holy Island, at Fenwick, Ford, Bambrough, Beadnell, Dunstonbrough, Ratcheugh, Alnwick, West Easington, the Roman Wall, Greenhead, and Temon, in Cumberland, in a continuous chain of depositions.

From this long line of drift and beaches of the sea, at a common date, it has gone to compose the great whinsill of the Alston Moor district, which may be said to include the Crossfell range of mountains underlying the whole of this ground in an unbroken form, and as a base, without any reference to undulations of hill and dale piled above it.

At Caldron Snout and neighbourhood, however, as well as along the Tees, from thence to the High Force Waterfall, it presents vast detached masses where precipitous scours and denudations are seen produced, ere it had undergone complete induration.

So far it is either met with in strata, as is the case in the Alston district, in massive ridges, as between North Tyne and Greenhead; or in isolated masses, as at Stirling, Edinburgh, Bambrough, Dunstonbrough, and Ratcheugh; and, in the neighbourhood of Bavington, it forms a number of isolated patches. In every instance its figure and form exhibit a low angle towards an ancient sea, and a precipitous front along its opposite range. These are proofs of the wondrous exactness with which tidal forces have lifted basalt on given localities, and deposited it apart from sandstone and peatstone.

We have next to trace it along the great Whindyke, which starts at Petteril Crooks, in Cumberland, and runs in a tolerably direct course through the eastern Moorlands of Yorkshire to Fylingdale Moor, a few miles south-west from Robin Hood's Bay—a space of ground exceeding one hundred miles in length.

The facts of which this dyke afford an example are remarkable. It mostly assumes the form of a perpendicular wall, from eighteen to thirty feet in thickness, is sometimes swelled out in breadth conformably to its rise in elevation, often traverses the centres of elongated ridges, and is frequently cut away entirely where its course crosses deep vales.

Thus it rises suddenly from the bed of the Petteril, undulates in height correspondingly with Little Barwick, Great Barwick, and Castle Houghen. It forms the well-known bay at Armthwaite, and rises rapidly from the bed of the river Eden to the summit of Combe Pike, Napton Common, and Buckcroft; and yet is not seen to cross the deep vale of Croglin Water at Dale, though it ascends to the top of Cringle Dyke, Whinfell, and Scalerigg.

At Renwick, it is seen crossing Raven Beck, and entering Hartside, in the direction of Harescough Castle, making its appearance near the seventh milestone from Alston to Penrith; from thence it is not seen for some miles until it appears at Tynehead Mill, taking the direction of Middleton Teesdale, and Bolam. It is frequently broken at intervals in approaching the vale of the Tees, but is seen at Yarm. Its form is well developed at Stanton, in York-shire, where it has been quarried to a great extent. Flanked by Lungbrough and Liverrock ridges, the southern shoulder of Red Topping and Cooke's Hill, it is found shedding the waters of a vast Cleveland westward, and Eskdale eastward. After passing through the east shoulder of the hill of Castleton, it is missing for some miles along the vale of Castleton and Danby. At Cloughtonbeck it re-appears, and then the vale of Eskdale to Egton Bridge, near to which it is quarried extensively. Again, ascending by Goadland, it cuts its way through a high range of land to the very summits of the hills, by Maybeck, to its terminus on Fylingdale Moor; but is not seen crossing Fylingdale to the eastward.

A careful examination of the ground which this remarkable stratum traverses, would seem to place it among deposits, coeval in date with that of the basaltic class already described, and of the material also exactly to both its sides. In no other form of physics does its formation appear admissible. Neither a wall of mud, nor of Plutonic silt, could remain sustained, unless shored along its sides by contemporaneous deposits, much less overhang its base. Nor is it in any way even probable, that ejected it should agree with the several conditions here brought under notice.

A look from the parish stone on Hartside, in the direction of Penrith Crooks, brings under view a chain of high and continuous ridges, cut across by Ravenbeck, Croglin Water, and the river Eden. It may be said these are points of denudation. Granted: then the very agent of denudation has deposited this change of ridges as they now stand, bisected by channels of drainage, while the basalt traverses their central heights. An admission of denudation, therefore, dispels at once all the illusions of central domes—Strabo's slippery hypothesis—and waves of translation, forming a wall of iron at the centre of a chain of hills. For such is the fact—a fact which proves that Neptunian Geology claims—laws of drifts concentrically and eccentrically expressed by physical forces, depositing mud conformable to gravity.

The separation of basaltic silt from sandy materials, by a pair of parallel tide waves, as placed against this dyke, it may be said, is too refined for credence. Are the motions of the planetary system less so? Every swimming force is finally true to its physical conditions—as true as the earth's motion on its poles: a cause of its polarity may be the distribution of land and water upon its surface, ever steadying its action by their relative firmness, deciding the movement of the great deeps, as originally determined by physical ascendancy, or the primary separation of mud and water. Connected with this sedimentary formation, a basaltic line of drift may be traced from Berrier to Sunderland, near Cockermouth. It composes the chief material of Binsey also, and skirts the northern escarpment of Caldbeck Fells.

CARBONIFEROUS LIMESTONE INTERSTRATIFIED BY SANDSTONE AND SLATE CLAY.—The position of basalt among the sandstone group of sedimentary strata, like a cornice in an edifice, shows what was completed before, and what afterwards. From Dunstonbrough to Temon, and from Patteril Crook to Fylingdale Moor, it marks the exact shores of a deep bay, at a compact te, along with all its tidal movements, whether parallel or counter-currents. We also observe that, at this period of time, a south-west tide wave had been rred off from a north-east and a north-west wave—from the Old Man ountain to Fountains Fell—excepting the confined channel of the Lune d its tributary streamlets.

On these new physical conditions, therefore, the several tide waves had gun to flow among barriers previously formed. The north-west wave taking e shore of Dunstonbrough on a southern bearing, suddenly fell into a deep y on Temon and Petteril Crooks; and rebounding on an angle of incidence, ok partly the northern parallel of the basaltic dyke into Robin Hood's Bay, t that the Solway wave, partly divided into two parallel waves by the old red andstone of Melmerby and Dufton, and barred from the Lune by the old red andstone of Shap Abbey, Shap Wells, and Raisbeck Common, bore directly pon Harwood Dale, in Yorkshire, and along the southern parallel of the reat basaltic dyke. Hence a southern wave had begun to run in direct urses into a great bay, barred northward by Protozoic schist and old red andstone, and in collision with the north-east and south-east wave, from ountains Fell by Talk-on-the-hill, to the borders of North Wales.

From this date, then, in treating on the approaches to the Lake District, eology exhibits a sedimentary progress merely in the filling of three great ays placed apart from one another, east, west, and south, or Northumberland nd Durham, the Solway, and Morecambe and Mersey Bays.

On the east, we find a bay shored by basalt for about one hundred and orty miles—that is, from Dunstonbrough by Temon, and the Alston Whin- sill to Flyingdale Moor or Robin Hood's Bay. These conditions, at a date listinctly made out, and similar throughout the Hartside, Crossfell, and Alston district, give a deep interest to the question of what had been com- pleted before the deposition of the great Whinsill, and what followed after; and more especially so from its being indirectly connected with what some choose to call a "great fault," though nothing remarkable in itself, being merely a sedimentary result of stratification, occuring almost everywhere throughout the Penine chain of hills—the out crop of regular strata denuded.

Admitting that this so-called "fault" runs from Talkin on the north, to beyond Settle on the south, a space of more than sixty miles, it is merely a line of tidal collision, east and west, at a specific date. In the Alston and Crossfell district, the stratification has been ascertained or estimated to the extent of 1,524 feet in thickness. As a part of this sum, eleven beds of limestone, 872 feet in thickness, are below the whinsill, and interstratified by 648 feet of sandstone and slate clay; then comes the whinsill, 60 feet in thickness, and which is immediately overlaid by the Tyne-bottom limestone, so called from its being seen in the bed of the river Tyne at Garrigill. Above the whinsill, there are eight beds of limestone 186 feet in thickness, interstratified by 258 feet of sandstone, making together 444 feet.

By dividing these data into three parts—the upper including the whinsill, the middle part, or one-half of what lies below the whinsill, and the lowest part, which is the remainder below—we shall find with what remarkable equality this mass of sandstone and slate clay has been proportionally inter- stratified by beds of limestone in repeated alternations.

In recapitulation, we have in descending series:—

Parts of the whole.	No. of Limestone Beds.	Feet in Thickness.	Sandstone and Slate Clay in Ft.	Total Thickness in Feet.	Proportion of Limestone.	To the beds of Sandstone and Slate Clay.
Middle.	7	180	321	510	100	to 170
Lowest.	4	183	327	510	100	to 178
Total..	19	549	966	1,524	Av. 100	to 172

These results in the proportional deposition of limestone, as interstratified with sandstone and slate clay, exhibit uncommon regularity in the secondary law by which they have been alternately assimilated, in a stratum 1,524 feet in thickness. The fact of their being so interstratified, and yet separated by a physical force, would seem to prove a strong atomic tendency to definite proportions, in rolling admixtures deposited by a stream of water unfolding an organic law in balanced forces applicable to the universe, if not equivalent to electro-chemical ascendency, operating through the agency of highly excited waters on muddy materials in a state of admixture, and placing such mud under organic terms of mechanical forces brought into a state of equilibrium, in which all being has resolved itself into nature's laws, as expressed in the pure language of the Creator's fiat.

We shall here return to the "greatest fault" in Europe, so called by those who have failed to interpret the laws and form of drift. Were the length of such fault taken at sixty miles, from north to south, and its breadth some twenty miles, we should have an area of 1,200 square miles, presenting a continuous base, with a superstructure of hill and valley piled thereon, like so much statuary chiselled off by denudation; and yet denudation is not reckoned a fault, because it merely exposes an older base; or cuts away an outcrop.

For instance, were a section of twenty miles taken north-eastward, from Melmerby and through Crossfell, we should find a descending base of old red sandstone, and an ascending series of limestone slate clay, and sandstone beds in alternate order, until we got to the whinsill and Tyne-bottom limestone, wherever come at, and forming a regular and unbroken base throughout.

But the superstructure piled upon this base is, notwithstanding, a series of hills and valleys, in which the several strata are cut away by denudation while in a state of softness, so as to bring out regular slopes on the sides of the hills. As an example, Middle Fell, in Alston, has finely rounded declivities on all sides, as if scoured away by a tidal wave, and yet its beds of stratification dip very slightly. Hence the beds which compose the upper structure of that mountain, are none of them extended beyond its sides; but the older beds—the whinsill among the rest—which form its base, are extended beneath the valleys throughout. It cannot, then, be an uplifted pile, as the base denies a corresponding state of disturbance. Any upheaving would, therefore, seem a physical impossibility, and its form attributable to denudation by a tide wave alone. The constancy of the whinsill, in its true

Graygarth Fell, Whernside-in-Dent, Ingleborough, Penyghent, and Fountains Fell—each and all are seen resting on a continuous base of Protozoic schist, while their upper beds are uniformly cut away by a tidal scour; limestone in nearly horizontal strata, in the first place, as well as in their newer beds in ascending series, to the very summits of these mountains—every one of which stands a detached pile of strata, until a continuous base is arrived at which links them together like twins of a common origin. Besides, in position and elevation they present a similar aspect, as if cast in a common mould, and bearing directly on a south-west tide wave as it now runs. Eroded and cut away alike to the summit of each, they are but extraordinary examples of deposition and denudation, in correspondence with the undulations of the earth's surface generally.

Obvious and unanswerable facts, therefore, go to show that Neptunian drift, amidst oceanic torrents, had furrowed the primeval surface of our globe; and that very little horizontal stratification had been extensively formed, until road levels, as those of Russia, had been sheltered by huge barriers cast round them. The true waves of translation are indeed those of Neptune's handywork, diminishing in power, according as these proud waves sunk into the self-made and mighty channels in which they now spend their fury. In short, every hill and valley of our island, when closely examined in structure, attest the ravages of denudation, from the gorges and passes of Braemar to the levels of Cambridge and Lincolnshire.

CARBONIFEROUS LIMESTONE IN THE IMMEDIATE LAKE DISTRICT.—What has been already said under this head, on an enlarged scale, sheds much light on deposits less complete at a corresponding date. A line drawn from Hensingham to Kirby Stephen, and in continuation to the source of the river Eden, along the frontier of Protozoic schist, an old red sandstone and basaltic formation, exhibits a chain of carboniferous limestone deposits, along every sinuosity of older formations; yet a constant inequality in the order and thickness of its beds would seem to come nearer to a rule than to an exception.

The Distington limestone may be looked upon as an appendant to Weddiker Rigg, westward therefrom, and that of Hensingham, Cleator, and Lamplugh, a deposit in a previously vacant furrow, between Weddiker on the west thereof, and Dent and Blakefell eastward.

It is met with north-eastward from Lamplugh, on the base of an older series, at Pardshaw, Brigham, Bridekirk, Blindcrake, and Sunderland, falling back north-westward to Tallentire, turning there to Gilcrux eastward; and thence rounding the declivities of a chain of hills by Parsonby, Threapland, Bothal, Torpenhow, and Ireby, to Ruthwaite. It next lines the opposite side of the river Ellen, by Uldale, Aughtertree, Sandal, and Boltongate, to Quarry-hill, where it turns at a point anti-clinally, and goes by Smithy-brow, Catlands, and Cleamire, to Brocklebank, falling back upon Brownrigg, by Paddy-gill, Whelpa, and Caldbeck, to Hesket New Market. It is then found at Warnell, Southernby, Berrier, and Penruddock, where it falls back on Greystoke, and Johnby; and recommencing its course by Stainton, Pooley, Shap, Orton Moor, Ashby Moor, and Stenkirith Bridge, to Mallerstang, and the source of the river Eden.

This line of outcrop takes a general level of the hills with remarkable continuity, in a sinuous and spiculated outline by no means mantle-shaped, around a previously uplifted dome; but deposited along the shore of an ancient sea with wondrous exactness, falling back as the hills fall back, and again advancing as they do so, like debris cast upon the seashore, and moulded to its creeks and bays in all its winding forms. For example, it does not cross the vale of the river Eilen directly from Torpenhow to Quarry-hill, as laid down on geological maps, but rounds the ancient estuary of the river Eilen along its former shores, from Torpenhow to Quarry-hill. This shows how maps, constructed by a "slippery hypothesis," fail altogether in the describing of facts in detail, however laboriously such facts may have been gained by the chipping of rocks merely. The Neptunian Geology corrects such errors at a glance, by merely tracing out the ordinary levels of an ancient seashore, as delineated by the superposition of newer strata.

Passing over many other circumstances which might have been dwelt upon in the district from Cleator to Thrimby, we may notice the range of hills shedding their waters northward into the river Eden, and southward into that of the Lune, from Wasdale Cragg to Ravenstonedale. Here the entire structure of the ground is laid open, even so plainly that a passenger on a railway, from Clifton to Tebay, may observe the leading features of its stratification; showing it to be a depository type of Ingleborough and Pen-y-gent, or a denuded pile raised upon a low and regular base of old red sandstone, as if it were a continuation of Crossfell, a repetition of which it really is on a reduced scale.

This base appears undisturbed, laid between the exhausted forces of the Eden and the Lune, and dipping on a low angle north-eastward. Here the law of deposition is obvious. While the waters of the Eden rolled material up a low inclined plane, and those of the Lune down such plane on the sides of the ridges, the ends of the several beds of stratification have been cut away by these respective tidal forces. Here we shall go to the south-west tide wave.

At the close of Protozoic schist and old red sandstone deposits, this wave necessarily fell perpendicularly on a shore of the sea, previously spiculated and distorted in form by vast torrents from the southward, having been broken thereon, from Black Combe on the west to Fountains Fell on the east, flowing into a bay some sixty miles across, from Furness on the north to North Wales on the south; and now a tract of land which bounds parts of Westmoreland, Yorkshire, Derbyshire, Lancashire, Cheshire, and North Wales.

Hence the deposition of limestone, within the boundaries of an extensive bay, took its course of drift along the channels of Morecambe Bay, the river Lune, the Ribble, and the Mersey, branching out along, and coincident with the direction of their several tributary streams.

Conformable to these conditions at the date of a carboniferous limestone deposit, running nearly on a right angle towards the courses then taken by a north-east and a north-west wave, that material was, by a drifting agent, laid either in longitudinal patches along the older valleys, which are situated between the Duddon and the Lune, or in advance of those valleys, as at Beetham and Farlton, Arncliffe, and Wharton Cragg. These deposits, perfectly coincident with a line of drift which is still the same, are admitted to be entirely at fault with any central dome, which a dorsal spine, composed of azoic schist, exhibits to the northward of this ground; for all the tidal furrows of this foreground run nearly at right angles upon such spine. Yet these obvious interpretations of a depository law seem a perplexing puzzle to those neglect facts to which physical forces lend satisfactory proofs, that our truth is by no means like a broken potsherd; but the regularly-devised scheme of an electro-chemical pile, bringing out results through nature's oratory; and as decreed by wisdom-eternal.

Eastward of the Lune, Greycarth Fell, Whernside, Ingleborough, Pen-y-ent, and Fountains Fell, present limestone as the lowest member of a series of piles raised upon a common base composed of Protozoic schist; and in the foreground of these respective piles, from Ingleton beyond Settle, a large deposition of limestone has occurred, more especially to the eastward of Wharfedale. In the valley of the Hodder, a talus of limestone is met with at Ribblesdale, Newton, and Stainburn, and expanding on the line of drift to the north-east. At Clitheroe, also, a similar talus is found under-lying Pendle Hill, and broadly extended to the north-east up Malhamdale, and beyond Sowerby.

To the southward of Pendle Hill, and between Colne and the Etherow, along the Penine chain, limestone is not met with, until the great field occupied by that rock in Derbyshire is arrived at; and we also find it lining the northern shore of North Wales at this date; determining the advanced boundaries of the great bay just pointed out, at the completion of carboniferous limestone deposits, showing, in every respect, an exact agreement between the figure and direction of these deposits, and the drifting force to which they are attributable. The want of this material in so large a portion of the Penine chain, between Colne and the Etherow, may be assigned to ordinary laws of denudation.

CARBONIFEROUS LIMESTONE IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.—Having already shown, in what has gone before, the general range of a Scandinavian ice wave, as it still falls on the coast of Northumberland and Durham, the vast deposition and interstratification of limestone with sandstones in the northern sections of Northumberland, and as associated with the basalt from Dunstonbrough to Temon; and by the great Whinsill to Cross Fell, until its talus falls into the basaltic dyke that completed the primary embayment of Northumberland and Durham. On these absolute conditions, then, by merely following a line of drift, projected from off Dunstonbrough on Cross Fell, any ordinary geological map enables us to trace this deposit in the two north-eastern counties at a glance, through its several complexities, even as decided by the cross-currents of the Tyne, the Wear, and the Tees valleys, along their upper sections.

SHALE AND THE UPPER MILLSTONE GRIT.—These deposits immediately followed that of carboniferous limestone, and its vast accompanying beds, as seen in the Alston Moor district, affording a few thin seams of coal; and alike finished the main outlines of each basin in connection with the Lake District, on the north-east, the north, and the south, for the reception of the coal measures.

It may be enough here to say, in general terms, that a sea beach, composed of shale and millstone grit, was, at this date, formed along the then western shore of the bay of Northumberland and Durham, as shown in our maps from Warkworth to the great Whin dyke.

In the bay of the Solway, also, a similar shore is met with along its southern border, from Hensingham to Appleby, while an extended outlyer intervenes between the rivers Eden and Petteril, commencing at Great and Little Barrock on the north, and extending to Whinfell Parks, in Westmoreland, on the south, and of which the well-known Lazonby flagstone is a good specimen. A remarkable feature of this field of millstone grit is, that its beds are excessively broken into patches, owing to its base having given way in the early stages of its deposition; so that, in quarrying these flagstones, the workmen have to encounter an endless disturbance of its beds.

On the borders of the ancient bay, to the south of the Lake District, bounded by North Wales, the shale and millstone grit formations, there drifted in situ, afford an important link in the industrial prospects of our country—determining, as they do, the extent of workable coal within the widely-spread basin of the Mersey.

Along the shores of Morecambe Bay, these formations have been swept away by retreating torrents descending from the hills on the foreground of an Azoic and Palæozoic structure, except to the south-east, where they occupy a vast and conspicuous space of ground that had not been previously silted up by older drift, and composing the hills that enclose the trough of Bowland on the north, the west, and the south, along with foreground brought forwards to Poulton, Lancaster, Garstang, and Preston. The range of Pendle Hill so far only closes up the southern limits of these formations, while the Ingleton coal-field, deposited along a vacant trough among these hills, does the same on the north.

It was then that an eastern shore to this great bay was constructed, extending from Colne on the north to Cheadle on the south; and at the close of this date, an axis composed of the millstone grit formation was deposited also on central bearings, which may be taken from Ormskirk on the west, through Haslingden to the Hamilton Hills eastwards, completing an angulated chain of hills, with deep bays intervening, that now separate the basins of the Ribble and the Mersey.

COAL MEASURES.—The structure of hill and dale at the close of an upper millstone grit, the configuration of which had sheltered embayed waters, prepared a frame of ground for the reception of coal and its accompanying beds of drift, liable to depressions, slips, and other disorders in stratification. As a reservation, by the way, thin beds of coal are found between the yellow sandstone and the close of an upper millstone grit. Some of these beds are placed in almost horizontal strata, near the tops of the mountains, of which Penygvent and Winter Fell, near Chorley, are examples.

The Whitehaven coal-field, in the ancient bay of Solway, seems lapped around the terminus of the Hensingham limestone, which ends a lineal course on the bearings of St. Bee's Head, where a north-west tide-wave still sheds its waters northwards and southwards. Conformably with this incident in the tides, the Whitehaven coal field is not extended to the south of St. Bee's Head.

From Whitehaven, then, northward only, the coal measures form an advanced shore of this ancient bay, by Harrington, Workington, Flimby Moor, Dearham, Gilcrux, Bolton, Rosely, and Sebergham, until cut short to the eastward of Netherscales, by the millstone grit of Scratchmell, Lazonby, and Penrith Beacon.

On reference to what has been said concerning a former north-eastern bay—now Northumberland and Durham—it is only necessary to observe here, that it has been filled up or underlaid by the coal measures, from Boomer on the north to the crossing of the great basaltic dyke on the south. Antecedent to a date when those drifted materials of which the coal measures are composed, had been projected southwards from off the advanced ground of Boomer into the then bay of Northumberland and Durham, the ancient rents that deposited a continuous chain of hills eastwards, from Petteril looks to Fylingdale Moor, had been effectively barred across by a limestone and sandstone structure. On these terms, at the date we are now treating out, a direct current must have gone from Boomer, bounded by a winding a-beach of shale and gritstone to the westward thereof, as far south as Nottingham. Verified by the fact that the coal measures are seen to take such a rection; and through the Vale of the Trent, probably underlie the new red sandstone into Staffordshire.

The southern bay of the Lake District has been almost entirely denuded: the coal measures to the northward of the sinuous ridge of millstone grit, the axis of which goes from Ormskirk to Haslingden, with the exception of the Ingleton and Burnley coal-fields, the latter of which is synclinally placed between Pendle Hill on the north, and the Hamilton hills on the south thereof; while the material of coal, in the former instance, has been drifted and stranded on the ancient escarpment of Ingleborough, by no means as a fault, but in a regular sequence of deposition, as determined by previous incidents, according to which denudation had stripped off the entire series from Protozoic schist to the coal measures, reversing the dip of stratification in a common Neptunian order of events.

On these previous terms, therefore, the ancient bay of the Mersey, and its tributary drainage courses, formed a field of the coal measures apart by itself, the boundaries of which on the north were the central axis of Ormskirk and Haslingden, on which a series of deep bays was anciently formed along the Sankey Valley, and vales of Wigan and Chorley, Bolton and Longworth, Bury and Rawtenstall, Rochdale and Littleborough. Hence, Wigan, Bolton, Bury, and Rochdale, are each of them placed on the borders of a widely extended field of coal southward. Oldham and Ashton-under-Lyne, also, are situate on the eastern borders of this great field of coal, resting on the declivities of the Penine chain of hills. On the southern boundaries of this bay, also, drained into the valley of the Dee, the coal measures of Flintshire and Denbighshire are seen cropping out from under the red marl and saliferous system of Cheshire.

Viewing, at the same time, the relative positions of the North Staffordshire coal-field, and that of Shrewsbury, in connection with a channel of drift, traced into the bay of the Mersey, it may be fairly inferred, on the premises already given, that an area of ground occupied by a red marl and saliferous formation, is underlaid by the coal measures at a moderate depth. Should this be so, there is a store of coal so vast as to remove all fears of a deficient supply for ages to come.

NEW RED SANDSTONE, MAGNESIAN LIMESTONE, ALABASTER, OR GYPSUM, AND DILUVIAL BEDS.—At the commencement of this group of deposits, the ancient bays of the north, north-east, and south, had each of them diminished in area, and changed in outlines of shore, agreeably to the laws of drift.

That of the north, along its southern shore, had become much more even in outline, from Maryport by Aspatria, and Westward Church to Netherscales. Here the outlying deposit of millstone grit, between the Petteril and the Eden, came in the way; and yet the new red sandstone in the valley of the Eden re-assumed a contracting space of ground as if neither that formation, nor the chain of basalt from Little Barrock to Renwick, had laid in its direct course.

While a Solway tide-wave, therefore, from Maryport to Netherscales, ran along a convex shore, and had a tendency to that shore on the opposite coast of Scotland, the Solway wave running lineally thereon had furrowed its borders more deeply, so that the new red sandstone of Dumfriesshire is found in gorges, different in form from those of Cumberland—proving with the exactness geological formations may be traced out almost at a glance, by accepting physical laws of drift as a safe guide to incidental facts.

And here magnesian limestone, and gypsum, on the side of Cumberland, come strangely in the way. The former is met with on a line projected from St. Bee's Head, on Little Barrock, forty miles eastwards, and the latter from the same locality beyond Little Barrock, wanting, however, in long spaces of ground between these extreme points.

It is, however, in the diluvial beds of the plain of Wigton and Carlisle, that we witness depository laws of drift in all their exactness of minute details; and, as the true types of older structures, concentrically and eccentrically eliminated in beautiful series of hill and dale, as physically expressed along the northern escarpment of the Lake District.

Southwards from St. Bee's Head, a large area of new red sandstone now forms the shore of the sea, in advance of Azoic and Palæozoic formations, from Dent by Black Combe, to Lindal in Furness.

When we come to apply the laws of drift to the newest deposits found on the eastern shore of Durham—the stratified beds at the head of this section of our essay—that application is already at hand; and conformably an addition to the coal measures. The new red sandstone lying in superposition thereon, and partially overlaid by magnesian limestone, and diluvial beds.

A tide-wave from off the coast of Norway, flowing with projectile force from off Dunstonborough, everywhere spread diluvial beds over older structures; and, agreeably to the direction of that force, new red sandstone and magnesian limestone commence, in small patches only, to the north of Tyne-mouth.

In continuation southward, on the coast of Durham, magnesian limestone becomes at a mere point the overlying strata; and forms the coast line from thence to Hartlepool; where it has swelled out to Ferry Hill—fifteen miles in breadth, to the westward of Hartlepool. In flowing southwards, the space it occupies progressively contracts again by Midridge on the west, and Sedgfield on the east, until it reaches the great basaltic dyke. Here the ground was previously occupied by more early formations—the carboniferous limestone and gritstones—yet so depressed in the neighbourhood of Darlington and Yarm, as to allow the material of the magnesian limestone to drift southward; while the several vacant spaces of ground had been previously occupied by the lower beds of new red sandstone; and as a proof of this view, the magnesian limestone re-appears at Richmond, and holds the precise line of drift it occupies in Durham, until it reaches the Trent Valley, which cuts it off at Nottingham.

TIDAL PHENOMENA.—Wherever we take our stand within the limits of the Lake District, proofs of tidal influence are brought into notice. The symmetrical grandeur which a view of Ullswater presents to the eye, as seen from the lake, embodies in the imagination furious torrents furrowing an Alpine region set in all the depths of shadow, and with gracefully rounded brows.

Cast the eye on the gorge of Borrowdale from Friar's Crag, and, in the language of Professor Sedgwick, we detect "the beating of the sea upon the edges of the old contorted slates," ere those slates had been transfused, by electro-chemical agency, out of mud into rock.

Nor is Buttermere less noted for wild grandeur, as seen on the bare frontal of Honistar Crag, where Neptune's chisellings are deeply struck. Ennerdale and Wastwater, also, afford similar instances of these fearful strokes which the proud waves have left, whilst those deep and magnificent furrowings ranging up Langdale, as seen from the bosom of the Windermere Lake, equally remind us of mighty torrents beating on mountains of azoic schist, originally composed of plastic mud, now modelled into normal carvings and lovely vales.

And nowhere are these beautiful and varied instances of the sublime more broadly mapped out than along the southern escarpment of those hills which lie extended from Black Combe to Gatesgarth, at the head of Long Sleddale. Indeed, these holy vestiges of a former world, composed out of mud, and moulded by the guidance of Infinite Wisdom, would seem to owe their matchless charms in a compressed form to centricity of hill and dale, constructed by a triple collision of tide-waves conformable to channels along which they still flow.

SEA-BEACHES, SCARS, AND CAVERNS IN LIMESTONE, AND INSTANCES OF TIDAL SCOURING THEREON, OR SCRIDDLED LIMESTONE.—Among the proofs of elevated sea-beaches, at an early date, none are more remarkably developed than the parallel roads of Glen Roy. Had these roads been either works of art, or the effects of glaciers gradually descending from the hills, there must have been remains of debris about them in witness of their origin. These are wholly wanting. They are, indeed, beaches of the sea, scoured off the face of the material deposited, ere it had undergone induration. Hence, as seen in descending gorges of intersection, they are ancient beaches of the sea, cut away from what is now a solid rock, and are by no means the only instances of similar records in the Highlands of Scotland.

The azoic schist formation in the Lake District is celebrated also for the grandeur of its scars, as already given in the last section. Those met with, cut out of limestone, are equally so. Such are Whitbarrow Scar and Scout Scar, near Kendal; Giggleswick Scar, Castlebar, Stainforth Scar, and Austic Scar, in the neighbourhood of Settle, in Yorkshire; Malham Cove and Gore-dale, in Malhamdale; and Kelsey Cragg, in Kettlewell. Each and all attest the breaching or abrading force of a south-west tide-wave running upon older barriers, lying directly across the line of its advance, and breaking in torrents on the face of newer deposits, ere the induration of those deposits had been completed.

A limestone formation coeval in date, taking its course along the northern escarpment of the same district, from Hensingham to the river Eamont, holding its sedimentary course along the edge of a previous structure, in a free and smooth line, presents none of those instances attributable to tidal violence, a few instances of large swallow holes excepted.

But no sooner do we reach the northern aspect of the chain of hills, from Shap to Crosby Garret, where a southern wave has obviously spent its force in breaking on these hills in a northern direction, than many thousands of acres are met with, covered over by scoured, or what is locally called scriddled, limestone. Some parts of this ground are, indeed, so completely and broadly spread over by such limestone, as to impart a notion that a far-extending stony desert is spread around us.

On the southern aspect of this chain of hills, however, the scoured limestone ceases from their summits, and lines of sea-beaches run for many miles in succession along their declivities, while a number of cross scours, at the watershed points of the ridge, again and again show the exact direction which these torrents of water have taken at an ancient date, leaving no doubt about the hand that has written these eternal records of the past in legible characters.

Along the western escarpment of the Hartside and Crossfell range, also, a few traces of sea-beaches are met with, between Castle Carrock on the north, and Dufton on the south. Beyond Dufton, however, the gorge of High Copedale presents a circuit of splendid scars and terrace-formed ground along their upper borders. Again, between Murton and Stainmore, Melfell, Roman Fell, Warcop Fell, and Warcop Scar, standing over against Smardale, from whence a line tide-wave bore upon these frontals; conspicuous lines of sea-beaches are found, and instances of scoured limestone may be traced from thence across the Stainmore pass into Yorkshire.

In further examining a chain of hills which shed their waters into the Eden and the Lune, we find the figure, elevation, and composition of Ship Thorn, Dudley Pike, Bousfield Pike, Orton Scars, Powston Knott, and Asby Scar, so nearly alike, and conformable to the laws of drift, that we may fairly attribute them to a common origin, a composition of tide-waves as they yet flow. Besides, near the summits of these hills, 1,300 feet above the present sea level, swarms of zoic products are found, evincing that creatures of a former state of the world had there lived and sported among eddies and shallow waters, where exhausted waves broke and curled in playful circles around them; but it is on the foreground of the carboniferous limestone, deposited by a south-west tide-wave, that we are to look for those multitudinous instances of ancient beaches of the sea, which might be expected to accompany the great scar limestone already referred to. Wharton Crag, Yealand, Arncliffe, Storth Crag, Beetham, and Haverbreak, to the south-west of Milnthorpe, accordingly afford marked examples of these beaches, and Dalton Fell and Farlton Knott of scoured and scridled limestones. These are respectively seen from the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway.

It is not, however, until we reach Chapel-le-Dale, some miles to the eastward of this locality, that the most complete and beautiful instances of these ancient sea-beaches are met with; and the best view to be taken of them is gained by descending that dale along the Hawes and Orton road on Ingletan, holding Whernside-in-Dent to the right, and Ingleborough on the left hand. Similar in configuration to the parallel roads of Glen Roy, there are denudations in which the rock is cut away along their terraces, succeeded by a beach, on an angle of about forty-five degrees, composed of disorderly blocks of limestone, resembling lumps of earth, similar to a beach along Burgh Marsh, in Cumberland, where the Solway tide-wave is encroaching on the land. The lowest of these beaches has all the appearance of a well-formed creek of the Solway, except that the material is rock in one instance, and lumps of earth in the other, brought down by the breaching agency of the flowing tide.

Like the roads of Glen Roy, also, there is a triple parallelism of these beaches, on the declivities of both Ingleborough and Whernside, coequal in elevations, while the very summit of Ingleborough is encircled by a sea-beach, succeeded by a spacious plateau, sufficient in extent for a race-course, and affording proofs that these several incidents have occurred while the material of the mountains was in a state of comparative softness.

Here we find, also, the true manner in which caverns have been formed; the Weathercote Cavern being a large sunken pit in the bed of the stream, occasioned by its descent through beds of limestone, which were scoured away ere induration had been completed, until falling upon a solid structure of Protozoic schist impervious to water, it is brought out to day again at the point where limestone is first seen resting upon a base of schist; and higher up Chapel-le-Dale, on both the lower declivities of Ingleborough and Penyghent, similar caverns are very frequently met with, doubtless the same in origin.

In this dale there are also extensive areas of ground, so thickly overspread by scoured limestone, as to induce an illusion in sunny weather that there are sheets of water where none are to be found; and it may be here stated, that the upper beds of limestone shale which underlie the summit of Ingleborough, at an elevation exceeding 2,000 feet above the sea level, abound with zoic remains, the inhabitants of a former sea that has gone down into the deepened furrows of the ocean, scoured out by forces of gravitation, ere Infinite Wisdom had completed the world's works.

In this locality, also, on the brow of Whernside, Yorda's Cave is one of those extraordinary excavations, which torrents of water, descending through open beds of limestone, have effected. Clapham Cave, on the southern slopes of Ingleborough, is another of those wondrous caverns, produced by a streamlet falling through beds of limestone, at Gappinghole, upon a base of schist, and then scouring away a channel for itself into Clapdale.

Still further eastward, on Malham Moor, and on Broadley Moor, sea-beaches are seen to a considerable extent, as the upper structures of Malham Cove and Goredale. Again, on the southern face of Great Whernside, there are magnificent instances of these beaches in bold relief and horizontal terraces. Up Littondale, also, by the free rebound of a tidal wave from off the brow of Whernside, they are seen well defined on the only northern aspect of ground met with. Beyond Grassington, however, further to the eastward, these sea-beaches are found to cease altogether, when less opposed and more exhausted waves deposited the material of drift in onwads and flowing lines, instead of breaking on the southern face, and along the eastern and western sides of barriers lying immediately on their line of advance. Hence the hills throughout this locality, from Clapham to Malhamdale, are usually precipitous along their southern aspects, and comparatively flattened northwards.

Here we find the central axis of England lying midway between a north-east and a south-west tide-wave; and it is here, also, that Protozoic schist is found to terminate its eastern flank. No sooner does the ground come within the range of a north-eastern tide-wave, than we observe an entire class of phenomena closing at once, and totally different directions of hills, valleys, and drainage lines, conforming to the instrument of drift, to which they owe their construction.

ELEVATION OF DRIFT BY TIDAL FORCES. — We are here led to atomic laws that lie within our means of observation. The earths, in a finely comminuted state, readily mix with water; opposite to this, water, either in motion or a comparative state of stillness, has a decided tendency again to precipitate the earths, or drive them away from it. Mud and water, therefore, beyond given proportions of atomic gravity, cannot remain in a state of combination, and naturally separate. That separation must be an established law in physics, identical with atomical laws, with those of gravitation and electro-chemical laws. It is then the law of the universe, and a special law of being in organised forms.

We then seem to come at the law by which mud and water have separated. According to atomic proportions, therefore, the surface of the earth is two-thirds water, and one-third land; while the scouring power of the south pole has given to the Pacific Ocean, in its full extent, one-half of the surface of the whole earth, so that the rest of the globe is two-thirds land, with one-third water, in definite proportions.

Laws of drift applied to a rolling ball of mud, floating amidst realms of physical force, would appear to have brought out definite proportions between the two areas of land and sea, agreeable to the terms of an atomic theory; sanctioning an inference that electro-chemical results are identical with those of physical force, which adjust themselves universally, and bring all atoms into a state of definite proportions, in which a concentric and eccentric balance prevail, as established by the Great Architect of the universe. Such is gravitation—such is physical force—and such are electro-chemical events also. The agitation of an admixture of materials in a fluid state, brings them finally and necessarily into atomic proportions even definitely expressed.

So have physical laws furrowed the surface of the earth symmetrically, repeatedly broken down masses of deposits, and recomposed them, until thoroughly fitted for the reception of animated nature in all her varieties and beautiful eliminations.

BOWLDERS.—These often shed considerable light on the direction of ancient currents. Like the ark of Noah, built in the valley of the Euphrates, and stranded on Ararat, blocks of Kirkcudbrightshire granite are found stranded on the declivities of Hartside, as if floated there on icebergs, and are traceable frequently in heavy masses on the lower levels of Cumberland, where they have been embayed and stranded, in proof of the means by which they have originally been transported.

In ascending the vale of the Eden, in the direction of Ousby, these witnesses of past events become lighter in weight and fewer in number, accompanied by blocks of Wasdale Cragg granite floated over the Shap range of hills. In going still further up this valley, in the direction of Murton and Stainmore, those from Wasdale Cragg increase in size and numbers; and bowlders from Kirkcudbrightshire are seldom if ever met with. In the neighbourhood of Bleatarn and Murton, bowlders from Wasdale Cragg become much more numerous, are readily traced to Brough Hill, on the declivities of Stainmore, and have been carried over that pass into Yorkshire, as far as Hull, a heavy one being placed in Darlington, as a boundary mark; insomuch determining the course of an ancient current having gone along a southern parallel of the great basaltic dyke, from a Solway tide-wave into Yorkshire.

Professor Sedgwick has justly said, "I see no reason for supposing that the movement of the great bowlders necessarily took place before the existence of the human race," since, like man, they rest upon diluvial beds. Then, as bowlders from Wasdale Cragg are found on the summit of Dudley Pike, some 1,300 feet above the level of the sea, so may it be accepted as proved that the sea has risen to that height since land had been undulated in surface as at present, if not within the period of man's creation. The learned professor admits, therefore, by inference, that the sea may have gone down 1,300 feet since the existence of the human race. As an additional proof of a recent floating of these bowlders, some of them are found resting on scoured limestone along the heights of Shap and Orton Fells.

Though some of these bowlders which compose Carl Lofts, at Shap, may have been partly arranged in Druidical days, yet it is obvious that most of these mysterious masses have been stranded along the watershed line on which they still rest, as records of nature's efforts, rather than works of man.

In further proof of the inference which these facts support, not a single instance can be given that they have either gone over Hartside or through High Copedale, and over Scoredale Head into the upper district of the Tees and the Tyne. Hence this comparatively recent flood, the Mosaic deluge, Hartside and the pass of Scoredale Head distinctly evince.

But Wasdale Cragg granite, in bowlders, being met with in Cartmel and at Darlington, affords ample testimony as to the course which this tide-wave took in its advance and retreat, teaching us, by the way, that Geology, as a science, relies upon physics and facts, rather than upon merely slippery hypothesis.

ON THE SOILS OF THE LAKE DISTRICT.—In the composition of what are called sub and supersoils, the base is commonly the debris of events gone before. It is generally a rule in Geology, that soils are kindred to the materials from whence they have been originally drifted. Those of the Solway basin, for instance, are composed of clay from the debris of a schistose structure, sand from denudations of millstone grit in the Penine chain of hills, and an inappreciable portion of lime from a calcareous formation. Such a compound is commonly suited to thorough-draining, and the growth of turnips by forcing manures, as a step in advance for the production of culmiferous crops, and as a preparation for fruitful pasturage.

What may ever be a proper rule in husbandry thus far, may be quite inadmissible where the composition of the soil has been derived from materials very different in origin. The art of farming, indeed, depends on much experience and exact observation, often difficult to transplant from one district to another, where the ingredients which compose the soil may be differently constituted. So the skilful farmer abstains from hasty conclusions which may lead to his ruin, and carefully considers those physical incidents he has to deal with, guided by what the deposition of a soil may happen to be.

GENERAL REMARKS. — No sooner do we investigate nature, and nature's laws as we find them, than we seem to have got into a labyrinth of miracles. Take merely the multitudinous varieties of granite, each sort in itself would seem to sustain a conformable character in the grey granite of Kircudbrightshire, or the porphyretic granite of Wasdale Cragg. For instance, whether we assume the agent of crystallization to have been electro-chemical, or central heat, results are so constant in themselves, even to the blending of colours and similarity in structure, that should it be asked, Why has this been so? we avoid an answer in despair. It is so! He who believes in nothing but what he can understand, must either believe in very little, or in a world depending upon conjectures. Nevertheless, we are able to place reliance on the truths of physical force, and decrees of Providence leading to creative ends.

Should it be asked, What is heat? It may be answered. In combustion, carbon is the material consumed. Yet electro-chemical agency is qualified to raise a high degree of heat, divested of the presence of carbon; showing that, whenever we attempt to promote science for the development of knowledge, we ought to scrutinize nature and her laws with great caution, and with strict regard to that great Being who has established the world by his wisdom, and brought all forces to a state of universal equipoise.

BOARD OF TRADE RETURNS FOR 1855.

On Thursday, February 21st, the monthly returns of the board of trade were issued. The returns for the month terminate on the 31st of December, 1855, and for the year ended 31st of December, 1855. We subjoin the total declared value of the exports of British and Irish produce and manufactures during the month and twelve months, including only "enumerated articles."

Year	For the Month.	For Twelve Months.
1855 .....	£7,866,324	£94,185,598
1854 .....	£6,428,893	£85,554,183
1853 .....	£6,572,791	£87,387,627

Including the enumerated articles, the month's exports for 1855 raised to £8,815,442, against £7,344,473 in the corresponding month of last year; and those of the twelve months to £95,669,380, against £97,181,710 last year, and £98,933,781 for 1853.

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.
